COLLECTION OVERVIEW

The Business History Collection is a primary source of information representing the American economy during the 20th century. It provides a detailed picture of business during a period of radical transformation, as two World Wars, increased mass production, the advent of new technologies, the consumer revolution and recession of the early 70s all exerted their influence on the economy.

The collection contains 50 serial publications providing current economic, industrial and commercial data relating to most of the major industries. The material has been filmed in two sections, with each title running in chronological sequence:

- Section I: Trade and Business Associations
- Section II: Research Organizations and Financial Institutions

The statistical data contained in the Business History Collection is unavailable elsewhere, since these publications, intended to provide only current information, were not reprinted. Among the titles included:
