Introduction

The years of Andrew Jackson's life spanned more than seven crucial decades in the history of the American nation, from the early days of the revolutionary era to the eve of Texas annexation. During these years the British colonies won their independence, established a republic, and expanded across the continent to the Oregon country. Large increases in population and rapid expansion altered the character of the nation, provoking sectional tensions, Indian conflicts, and social disharmony. Revolutions in industry and transportation transformed business, labor, and professional organizations and structures. The economic life of the country advanced through unsettling cycles of expansion and contraction, affecting varied interests in different ways. Money, banking, internal improvements, the tariff, public land disposition, and moral questions, including slavery and Indian removal, became commonplace subjects of politics. Party structure, practices, and procedures changed drastically, a new style of electioneering emerged, and voter participation rose as the first American party system succumbed to the second.

Following the War of 1812, nationalism emerged as a dominant mood, but sectionalism and slavery soon reached crisis proportions, threatening the young republic. It was an age when such leaders as Thomas Jefferson, James Madison, Daniel Webster, Henry Clay, John C. Calhoun, and Andrew Jackson guided the nation through revolutionary economic, political, social, and cultural changes that tested the mettle of men and the organic nature of the Union. The same period marked the origin of the modern American state and the modern American presidency and the entry of the young republic as a full-fledged member in the international family of nations.

Andrew Jackson was one of a handful of Americans who dominated the first half of the nineteenth century. He had made his political debut as delegate to the Tennessee constitutional convention in 1796. Subsequently he served as congressman and senator, state superior court judge, state militia officer, and territorial governor of Florida. He rose to national fame, however, as a military officer, defeating the Creeks at Horseshoe Bend and the British at New Orleans. Jackson's popularity carried him to Washington in 1829, where as seventh president of the United States he made his mark, lending his name both to a movement, Jacksonian Democracy, and to an era, the Age of Jackson: He was the only occupant of the White House between James Monroe and Abraham Lincoln returned to office. As president, Jackson redefined and strengthened the office, he altered the role of the federal government in the nation's development, and he championed the concept of a united nation in the face of rising threats of disunion. In retirement, he remained the figurehead and spokesman for the coalition and party that had elected him to office.

By all accounts, Andrew Jackson was one of this nation's strongest presidents, but he was also one of its most controversial. Though a beloved hero and leader to many, opponents denounced him as a ruffian and tyrant who violated accepted political norms and arrogantly asserted his own will. His controversial character revealed itself in his private as well as his public life. Strong-willed and ever sensitive to honor, Jackson punctuated his entire life with quarrels and disputes. His duels have become the stuff of legend. And yet, Jackson revealed another side, filled with generosity, tenderness, paternal care, and a courtly manner. Loyal to friends, unyielding to foes, Jackson was both honored and despised, loved and hated. Self-styled spokesman of the "common" man, he was nevertheless a most uncommon man.

The documents in this microfilm edition of the papers of Andrew Jackson portray both the man and the period. The personal, public, and official letters, speeches, memoranda, legal papers and opinions, receipts, accounts, and deeds collected here and published for the first time chronicle his life as he reacted to people, issues, and events. They document every phase in his complex life and the course of a nation in transition. With the publication of this microfilm, a supplement to the microfilms of Jackson papers in the Library of Congress and the National Archives, the complete body of Jackson papers is now available for the study and reevaluation of Jackson and the period which bears his name.

Acknowledgments

The objective of the Papers of Andrew Jackson--to conduct an exhaustive worldwide search for extant Jackson documents and to publish them in complementary microfilm and letterpress editions--is far beyond the ability of any single individual to accomplish; and in achieving its goal, the staff of the Jackson Papers has been most fortunate in having the assistance of thousands of individuals and institutions. The list would be too long to name each separately, but to all who responded to our requests for documents, to those archivists and curators who made available and searched collections, and to those who provided funds and moral support, we are indeed grateful.

Chief among those organizations which have provided financial and moral support has been the Ladies' Hermitage Association. More than fifteen years ago there was wide interest in founding a scholarly enterprise to collect, edit, and publish the papers of Andrew Jackson, but it was the creative leadership of the Ladies' Hermitage Association that translated interest into accomplished deed. With the strong support of the Association's regent, Mrs. Fred Russell; executive board member, Mrs. Harry A.J. Joyce; and its trustees, the Association undertook in 1971 to support the project with an annual stipend and housing on the Hermitage grounds.

Generous encouragement and support of the project has continued under the succeeding regents, Mrs. Cawthon A. Bowen, Jr., Mrs. Allen Steele, Mrs. Robert W. Sturdivant, Mrs. Walter Morgan, Jr., Mrs. James H. Reed III, and Mrs. Charles E. Wells. For their continued nurturing over the years, indispensable to our success, we are and will remain deeply indebted to the LHA's trustees, regents, board, and membership.

Several institutions deserve special mention, mainly for the magnitude of their contributions. Chief among these are the Library of Congress, the National Archives, and the Tennessee State Library and Archives. At the Library of Congress, John McDonough, Manuscript Historian, has assisted the project at every turn: he has made the Library's extensive Jackson collection readily available, he has answered innumerable questions, and he continues to share with us his broad knowledge. At the National Archives, the research staff of the National Historical Publications and Records Commission, and particularly Mary A. Giunta, now Assistant Director of the Commission's Publications Program, Sara Dunlap Jackson and Timothy Connelly, Archivists, have been indefatigable in unearthing documents and answering difficult questions. Our demands at the Tennessee State Library and Archives have been incessant, but Jean Waggener, State Archivist, and her staff, Marylin Bell Hughes, John Thweatt, and Ann Alley; and Fran Schell, Reference Librarian, have cheerfully made their collections available and serviced our research requests. The staffs of the Vanderbilt University and the University of Tennessee libraries, like those of Houghton Library at Harvard University, the Chicago Historical Society, the Historic New Orleans Collection, the New York Public Library, Perkins Library at Duke University, Alderman Library at the University of Virginia, and Baker Library at Dartmouth College have far exceeded our expectations with their cooperation and assistance. The hundreds of other institutions and individuals who have answered our queries and provided us with documents and information are noted in the Repository Symbols list and in the provenance notes appended to each document. We sincerely appreciate their assistance.

We are also deeply obligated to several individuals who have assisted us far beyond any normal expectations: Debbie Cooney, research assistant; Leland Johnson, freelance historian; Kenneth C. Thomson, Jr., a Donelson descendant; Fletch Coke and Angie C.M. Donelson, members of the Board of the Ladies' Hermitage Association; Robert V. Remini, Chairman of the project's Advisory Board, who shared with us his knowledge of Jackson and assisted in our search for documents; Col. James S. Corbitt, who shared his collection and gave moral support; and Mary-Jo Kline, who gave us the benefit of her experience in documentary editing. To each of them, we offer our sincere thanks.

Among those to whom we are most indebted are Harriet Chappell Owsley and Sam B. Smith, former editors. They bequeathed to the project they guided from 1971 until 1979 a strong base from which the search for documents and their editing for microfilm and letterpress publications might proceed.

Our sponsors have seen to it that the work continued, and our indebtedness to them is great and our appreciation sincere: to John Cooney, former Resident Director of The Hermitage, and particularly to Ann Harwell Wells, now Regent of the LHA and liaison to the project, for more than seven years of continuous support and encouragement; to the National Historical Publications and Records Commission and its staff, Frank G. Burke, Acting Archivist of the United States, and Richard A. Jacobs, Acting Executive Director, Richard N. Sheldon, Assistant to the Director, Roger A. Bruns, Director of the Publications Program, and George L. Vogt, Director of the Records Program; to the National Endowment for the Humanities, Research Programs, for funding which made this microfilm publication possible, and especially to Richard Ekman, Director, and to staff associates Margot Backas, Kathy Fuller, David Nichols, and Helen Aguera, who have monitored our grant applications and our progress, and advised us when asked; to the Tennessee Historical Commission: Herbert L. Harper, Executive Director, Russell H. Hippe, Chairman, and Linda T. Wynn, Administrative Assistant; and finally, to our fiscal agent and sponsor, the University of Tennessee at Knoxville. At the University, we are fortunate to have the encouragement and support of Edward J. Boling, President, John W. Prados, Vice President for Academic Affairs, Jack E. Reese, Chancellor, and George W. Wheeler, Provost; but we are particularly appreciative of the Office of the Dean, College of Liberal Arts--Deans Lorman A. Ratner, Charles O. Jackson, and Mary P. Richards, and Phyllis Cole, Administrative Services Assistant--for their patience, understanding, and guidance in the day-to-day administration of the project.

The supporting staff of the Jackson papers has made the work easier and more pleasant. Volunteers Elizabeth King Folger, Mary Hathcock, and Maria Kieltyka helped us when there was no one else, and they have continued to help as the staff and work increased. Charles F. Bryan, Jr., former Assistant Editor and now Director of the Mercantile Library, St. Louis, helped us get the work started; and Linda Keeton, Susan Doughty, and Rosemarie Stinemetz not only assisted with the microfilm editing but also relieved the editors of other duties which would have fallen to them.

My own greatest appreciation and thanks is to those staff members listed on the title page. They, more than any others, are responsible for making available, finally, a comprehensive edition of the papers of Andrew Jackson and this Guide and Index to the Microfilm Editions.

The Papers

Andrew Jackson felt a deep obligation to history and, over the four decades he spent in public life, took particular care to preserve his papers so that his legacy to the American republic might be justly appraised. There were, however, unfortunate gaps in his collection. Jackson did not always keep copies of his extensive outgoing correspondence and much of that had been lost. The Hermitage fire in 1834 had also consumed some of his personal letters and, more important for posterity, he had ordered the private and confidential letters and memoranda of his two presidential terms destroyed in 1836. Yet, there remained a massive archives; and on August 7, 1842, and again on April 9, 1845, Jackson specifically entrusted all his papers to the custody of his longtime friend and adviser, Francis P. Blair, to be used at his discretion.

When Jackson died in 1845, Andrew Jackson, Jr., and Amos Kendall, a former member of Jackson's "Kitchen Cabinet," had possession of the papers. The larger body was housed at the Hermitage, Jackson's home. Kendall's collection, however, consisted of the more important documents, having been carefully selected by Jackson and his son, and by Kendall's nephew, James A. McLaughlin, in 1842 and 1843 and sent to Kendall for his use in a proposed serial biography of Jackson. Although projected for fifteen numbers, only seven subsequently appeared, beginning with the first in October 1843 and ending with the last in mid-1844. By July 1845, Jackson's closest friends conceded that Kendall would not likely complete his study.

After Jackson's death, Blair sought to claim the papers Jackson had promised him. Pursuant to Blair's request, in July 1845, Andrew, Jr., immediately forwarded the papers at the Hermitage, as Blair acknowledged in October. At the same time, Jackson fulfilled the second of Blair's requests and urged Kendall to turn over his papers to Blair. Kendall initially refused, however, and it was not until mid-1849 that he finally relinquished the bulk of the papers. According to the best available evidence, Kendall delivered part of the papers to Blair personally and part to Jackson Hall, the old Globe offices on Pennsylvania Avenue in Washington. But he withheld his personal correspondence with Jackson. Thus, within four years, Jackson's stated wishes for the disposition of his papers had been fulfilled. Blair had both the Kendall and Hermitage collections, the latter stored at his country residence in Silver Springs, Maryland. (For a more detailed discussion of the Blairs and the Jackson papers, see John McDonough's excellent essay in Index to the Andrew Jackson Papers, Washington, 1967.)

The Jackson papers attracted little public attention in the 1850s and 1860s, and the collection became somewhat reduced. Occasionally, Blair or his sons published an important Jackson document relating to a campaign issue, and they sometimes honored solicitations for Jackson autographs. In 1850 they extracted a large portion of Martin Van Buren's letters and sent them to him, at his request. They also destroyed a number of what they regarded as unimportant papers. They allowed Missouri Senator Thomas Hart Benton access to both sets of papers for his Thirty Years' View (1854-56), but denied James Parton the use of the collection for his three-volume Life of Jackson (1859-60).

Parton's study preempted the field and produced a hiatus in the efforts of Jackson's friends to commission a new biography of the "sage of the Hermitage." George Bancroft, whom many favored for the task, had never shown any real commitment to it, and even Francis P. Blair abandoned his fleeting notions of writing one. With Kendall's death in 1869, all hopes for a new and complete study vanished; and, upon Francis P. Blair's death in 1875, custody of the papers passed to his son Montgomery.

The last quarter of the nineteenth century marked a rekindling of interest in the Jackson archives. This change, which had a lasting impact on the Blair collection, grew out of the efforts of William Goodson Terrell (1829-1900), an Indiana-born, Kentucky-based newspaper editor, publisher, and correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial, to collect materials for a proposed history of Kentucky. In the course of his research, he became particularly interested in Amos Kendall as an early Kentucky journalist and Kendall's relationships with Henry Clay and Andrew Jackson.

In the late 1870s, Terrell sought out in Washington Kendall's son-in-law William Stickney, who in 1872 had published the Autobiography of Amos Kendall. Stickney loaned Terrell a copy of the work and at the same time produced for Terrell's examination a large bundle of Kendall-Jackson papers and correspondence. Terrell immediately requested and received permission to publish the documents in the Cincinnati Commercial.

While transcribing the papers, Terrell's interests switched altogether from the Kentucky history to Jackson. According to his own account, he had long admired Jackson and, as a lad of twelve, had read Kendall's serialized Life. With his discovery of the Kendall-Jackson papers, he developed a preliminary outline for a late nineteenth-century life and letters and began to search for the remainder of Jackson's correspondence. Through Stickney he located the long-forgotten Kendall portion at the Globe office and through Montgomery Blair he gained access to the Blairs' collection, which they brought to Washington for his examination.

Once he resolved his personal affairs in Kentucky, Terrell settled in Washington and began to devote his free time to the Jackson papers, which in his initial publication he described as a "mass of Jacksonia never before published." Over the next five years, until 1883, he published documents and articles dealing with virtually every controversial subject in Jackson's long life. At the same time, he contacted and consolidated his friendship with the Jackson descendants. He also gained the confidence of descendants of several of Jackson's associates, who loaned him their collections for research and publication.

Terrell's publications in the Cincinnati Commercial and elsewhere established beyond doubt the significance and value of the Jackson collection. They also induced the Jackson descendants to claim the papers, arguing that President Jackson had loaned the documents to Kendall and to Blair for the limited purpose of writing biographies. Whereas Kendall had partially fulfilled the agreement, Blair had not. The papers, they therefore argued, were rightfully theirs. Terrell supported these contentions and represented the Jacksons before the Senate Committee on the Library in March and April 1884. Although the Committee examined the Jackson papers and heard the evidence, it did not concur. A year later, the Jackson family sought to prove their ownership in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, but this effort also failed and the Jackson descendants allowed the case to drop in 1890.

Terrell, meanwhile, had amassed a large collection of Jackson papers, including copies and originals from the Kendall and Blair collections, from the collections of some of Jackson's contemporaries, and perhaps from the Jackson descendants themselves. Though he was authorized only to make copies from the Blair holdings and had been requested to return borrowed collections, he apparently violated these arrangements. At his death in 1900, he still had the large group of papers he had accumulated over a quarter century.

Terrell's destruction of the integrity of the Blair collection has made the history of the Jackson papers in the twentieth century much more difficult to trace. Jackson scholars and editors of Jackson have long expressed concern that a significant portion of the Jackson archives has not been found. Those documents published by Terrell, for which manuscripts were missing, led some to conclude that Kendall retained his portion and that it was consumed in the Washington fire of 1894 that purportedly claimed his papers. Others have suggested that significant documents may have been intentionally destroyed, or perhaps retained by Jackson descendants. This concern has been heightened by increased autograph market activity and intermittent transfers of Jackson items to repositories and private collectors around the country in recent decades.

The first major breakthrough in public access to the Jackson papers came in 1903, when the Blairs donated their holdings to the Library of Congress. Almost immediately, the Jackson descendants renewed their claim to ownership, assisted by John Wesley Gaines, congressman from Tennessee. Their efforts again came to nothing, but, in 1909, in the course of his investigation and negotiations for the return of the Jackson papers, Gaines located a Terrell collection, then held by a Washingtonian who had received it in payment for a debt Terrell owed. According to Gaines, he purchased the collection and returned it to Rachel Jackson Lawrence, Jackson's granddaughter. Conflicting reports of the transaction make it difficult to establish the size of the purchase, but the selection of documents printed in the Nashville Tennessean in April and May 1909 confirm that the documents were indeed from the Terrell holdings. While the Lawrences retained these documents for some time, the descendants of Andrew Jackson III, Rachel Lawrence's brother, sold a portion of their collection, approximately 2,000 manuscripts, to the Library of Congress in 1911.

These acquisitions by the Library led to efforts in 1919 to publish an edition of the writings and correspondence of Andrew Jackson. Jackson was one of the few prominent figures in America for whom there was no printed collection beyond the official papers in James D. Richardson's Compilation of the Messages and Papers of the Presidents, 1787-1897 (10 vols., Washington, 1899). The Carnegie Institution of Washington agreed to sponsor the work and J. Franklin Jameson persuaded John Spencer Bassett, who had published his Life of Andrew Jackson in 1911, to undertake it. Bassett labored at the task for eight years, editing the six volumes of the Correspondence of Andrew Jackson but publishing only three before his death in 1928.

For its time, Bassett's Correspondence set a high standard for documentary publications. His search for documents was thorough and exhaustive. Though forced by financial constraints to conduct his search mainly by mail and to rely upon the assistance of others to identify and often to transcribe documents, he managed to acquire copies of most of the Jackson papers then in the major repositories. His selection of documents, sometimes excerpted and generally emphasizing Jackson's military career, was on the whole sound, and his transcriptions, fairly accurate. Annotations and explanations, however, were sparse.

Shortly before the publication of the last of the edited volumes of the Correspondence in 1933, new discoveries diminished the completeness of the edition. While working on his biography of Andrew Jackson in 1931, Marquis James located a large collection of Jackson papers not previously available. This collection of almost 1,200 letters passed to the Library of Congress in late 1931; and from it, Jameson, Bassett's successor, selected approximately 100 items for inclusion in Volume 6. About the same time, roughly 600 items in the Charles F. Gunther Collection at the Chicago Historical Society became available, and one was included in the final volume of the Bassett series.

Over the next three decades, additional significant collections of Jackson correspondence and other papers surfaced in scattered repositories. The Jackson descendants' residual collection went on the market in the early 1920s and began to filter into repositories in the late 1930s. The Tennessee Historical Society and the State Library and Archives acquired through purchase and gifts a significant body of documents. The Library of Congress acquired, in 1943, approximately 600 fragments, and in 1964, from the Kendall descendants, the small but important group of Jackson-Kendall letters that Terrell had published in the Cincinnati Commercial. Other institutions--Princeton University, the Cincinnati Historical Society, Duke University, the University of Virginia, and Morristown National Historical Park--also accessioned important Jackson materials.

This explosion in the number of Jackson papers known to be held in widely scattered repositories prompted the establishment of the Papers of Andrew Jackson at the Hermitage in 1971 with the objective of searching for and publishing the Jackson papers in complementary microfilm and letterpress series. The microfilm edition, in conjunction with earlier microfilm series, is comprehensive, including all documents found in an exhaustive search. The printed-volume series, of which two have been published, is intended to be a highly selective and carefully annotated edition of fifteen volumes of papers, one volume of legal papers, and a comprehensive index.

This current search for Jackson papers has been the most thorough to date. It has been conducted by dozens of staff members and hundreds of cooperative archivists, curators, and librarians. The search has been carried into barns, attics, jails, and banks, as well as libraries, and has required an untold number of letters and telephone calls, and miles of travel in the United States, France, England, Scotland, and Spain. Staff members have visited and searched Jackson collections and those of Jackson's contemporaries in every major repository in the country. In the absence of evidence to warrant a visit, the staff contacted either by letter or telephone most other institutions that might conceivably hold Jackson papers: state and county archives; state and local historical societies; county, municipal, and private libraries; and historic sites. In one manner or another, the staff has contacted worldwide in excess of 6,000 institutions and 600 individuals--private collectors, autograph dealers, Jackson and Donelson descendants, and descendants of many of Jackson's contemporaries--seeking copies of their materials. The staff and its consultants have also searched the massive collections of autograph dealer catalogs at the American Antiquarian Society, Yale University, the Grolier Club, and the Huntington Library; and have scanned great numbers of published works: newspapers of Washington, New York, Cincinnati, and Nashville; nineteenth- and twentieth-century popular and scholarly periodicals; historical journals; diaries; reminiscences; printed collections of letters, monographs, and biographies; the Congressional Serial Set and American State Papers. And finally, the staff has searched dozens of unfilmed record groups in the National Archives and hundreds of rolls of film issued by the National Archives and Records Service. The results of this search are now made available on the accompanying thirty-nine rolls of microfilm.

This Scholarly Resources microfilm is a supplement to the 1967 Library of Congress microfilm publication of the Andrew Jackson Papers and to the NARS microfilm series. The collection, about half the size of that in the Library of Congress, consists of 14,000 new documents from approximately 335 repositories. A large portion of the Jackson papers published here was originally a part of the Kendall collection, retained by Terrell, and since dispersed throughout the country. This Microfilm Supplement, in bringing together all these documents, restores in large measure the integrity of the Blair collection and makes readily available--and in many instances for the first time--literally thousands of other items which illuminate the life and times of Andrew Jackson.

Editorial Method

This Microfilm Supplement to the Library of Congress Andrew Jackson Papers and the National Archives microfilm series comprises all Jackson documents found in the project's search not included on those two publications. It includes all additional copies of Jackson documents; variant copies or drafts; a typewritten or printed copy in the absence of a manuscript; documents from the Library of Congress Andrew Jackson Papers, Series 10 and 12, which have not been filmed; documents from the National Archives not available on film; documents from the Library of Congress and National Archives films incorrectly dated or identified; and all Jackson documents in collections other than the Jackson Papers in the Library of Congress, whether previously filmed or not. Spurious documents, in so far as they could be identified, have not been filmed.

In an effort to assist readers and researchers, targets have been filmed with each document. The target at the top of each document, beginning with that document's first page, carries the date of the letter and the full name of the writer, recipient, or subject of the item; and if the document is an enclosure or a cover letter, the target will so state. Square brackets around names and dates on these targets indicate information supplied by the editors. Targets filmed at the bottom of the first page of each document identify the type of document and the location of the original. Frame numbers appear below the documents.

With two exceptions--a series of early account books and addenda (acquisitions too late to interfile) appearing on Rolls 38 and 39--the documents have been filmed in chronological sequence. In those instances where there is more than one item on a particular date, the documents have been filmed in alphabetical order according to the last name of the addressee or recipient. Undated documents for which only an approximate date could be established precede dated items, but documents with ascribed dates are filed sequentially with dated ones. Accounts have been placed at the earliest date in the document rather than when rendered; undated Jackson endorsements on correspondence between other parties have been filmed according to the date of the letter; and treaties, pardons, and other such official documents have been arranged according to the date on which Jackson affixed his signature.

The Index provides access to this Microfilm Supplement and to the Library of Congress Andrew Jackson Papers series and the National Archives microfilm series. For the convenience of the user, this Guide and Index and the Index to the Andrew Jackson Papers, Library of Congress, have been reproduced on Roll 39.

PROPERTY RIGHTS

The user is cautioned that the publication of the contents of this microfilm may be construed as constituting a violation of literary property rights. These rights derive from the principle of common law that the writer of an unpublished letter or other manuscript has the sole right to publish the contents thereof, unless he affirmatively parts with the right; the right descends to his legal heirs regardless of the ownership of the physical manuscript itself. It is the responsibility of an author or his publisher to secure the permission of the owner of literary rights in unpublished writings. Any citation of or bibliographical reference to a manuscript in this microfilm should include identification of its owner or depository.

This index directs the user to papers of Andrew Jackson in three microfilm editions. Sample entries:

DLC-66	Library of Congress 1967 film, roll 66
M639-27	National Archives and Records Service film publication M639, roll 27
18-1192	Microfilm Supplement 1986, roll 18, frame 1192

Although essentially a listing of recipient and writer names, the index also includes a few subject headings, used only in instances (such as memoranda) where no personal name can be attached to the document. The user is cautioned that listings such as Bank of the United States by no means embrace all items concerning this subject.
