Introduction

BEFORE A RESEARCHER attempts to analyze the agency records on file at the John F. Kennedy Library, it is important to understand the history of the collections and the acquisitions guidelines of the particular material selected. This introduction describes the history, planning, methodology, and scope of the collection of Kennedy administration records on microfilm.

THE EARLY STAGES

Prior to John F. Kennedy's inauguration, historian Arthur Schlesinger, Jr., Harvard President Nathan M. Pusey, and Harvard Librarian Paul H. Buck approached the president-elect in order to convince him to follow the examples of the most recent presidents and establish a presidential library administered by the National Archives and Records Service (NARS). Since the plan for these institutions usually were developed late in an administration, after many of the important collections had been donated to private institutions, these men believed that if the president made it clear early in the administration that he would like commitments from members of the staff to donate their papers to the library, the facility could offer historians and scholars a more complete picture of the Kennedy administration. This plan distinguished the Kennedy Library from the existing presidential libraries at the time—the Franklin D. Roosevelt Library, the Harry S. Truman Library, and the Dwight D. Eisenhower Library—because these three institutions housed the personal and public papers of the president but few collections of the personal papers of members of the cabinet and staff. As Buck later wrote:

Our objective has been nothing less than the finest collection of primary source materials ever brought together under one roof for research in a specific period. . . . An outstanding collection, surpassing in quality any ever before assembled, is promised by the President's interest, by the early start that has been made in planning and collecting.¹

On September 20, 1961, the president appointed an informal committee to develop and expand plans for a presidential library. Members of this committee included Arthur Schlesinger, Jr., special assistant to the president; Theodore Sorensen, special counsel to the president; Paul Buck and Garde Wiggins of Harvard University; Wayne C. Grover, archivist of the United States; and Herman Kahn, assistant archivist. In November, President Kennedy formally announced his intention to establish a presidential library in Cambridge, Massachusetts, to be operated by the NARS in association with Harvard University. The committee had to address several responsibilities: locating a suitable site, outlining an organizational structure, developing a fund-raising plan, and writing an extensive acquisitions policy. By May 1962 the committee had completed an acquisitions policy statement that Schlesinger sent to top executive personnel, in which he communicated the "President's hope that his friends and associates will wish to assist in making the collections as complete as possible."²

Personal correspondence files, official correspondence files, work aids, notes, memorandums, personal accounts of events written as reminders, observations of high officials, extra copies of speeches, congressional testimony, reading files, and press releases were the types of materials requested, not the complete official original records of each department or agency. Schlesinger also requested microfilm or paper copies of official records that would help document the administration's major policies.

Schlesinger's guidelines assisted the departments and agencies in identifying pertinent materials. The amount of documents in the White House was so enormous that by the end of April 1963 it was estimated that the Kennedy Library would have to be much larger than initially planned in order to accommodate an expected eight years of presidential material. In October 1963, President Kennedy selected a building site next to the Harvard Business School along the banks of the Charles River. (These plans were later changed; the library is now located on Columbia Point in Boston.)

A CHANGE OF PLANS

Kennedy's assassination and the resignation or replacement of many of his appointees accelerated the pace of the library's acquisitions. A systematic program directed by Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy was mostly completed in fewer than eight months. The microfilming of department and agency records was an essential part of this program.

On December 9, 1963, Robert Kennedy appointed a coordinating committee to compile lists of important issues and subjects during the Kennedy administration. These lists were then compared to the lists of available material being compiled by individual agencies. In a December 19, 1963, letter to the department heads, Robert Kennedy reemphasized the acquisitions goals: "Our most important immediate problem in connection with the John F. Kennedy Memorial Library is the collecting of the significant papers and documents of the Kennedy Administration. To do this quickly, while memories and experience are still fresh, will require the close cooperation of all agency and department heads."³

By January 1, 1964, each agency head was to have submitted lists of topics involving presidential decision or interest. In a letter to department and agency heads, Robert Kennedy requested, as top priority, originals or copies of the papers, memorandums, notes, and correspondence of the head of each agency. The next priority was to make copies of selected portions of the official records of the department or agency. This material would include "staff papers, memoranda, and other documents relating to the major Kennedy Administration issues, as well as papers on any subject, major or minor, in which the President took a personal interest, which went to him for decision, or which emerged in response to Presidential request."⁴ He further stated:

I know this project will be a drain on your time and resources. But only in this way can we hope to build a collection which accurately reflects the career, the hopes and the achievements of President Kennedy and which fully illuminates the issues of his time.⁵

President Lyndon B. Johnson instructed the department and agency heads to provide full cooperation. However, no matter how dedicated and organized the participants were, this project proved to be extremely intricate, time-consuming, and difficult at times. Even Robert Kennedy, after reviewing the lists of the Department of Justice material, stated:

Let's decide what the issues are. . . . Could you say now or any of you say here what projects in the Department of Justice you should collect? In the Department of Defense? We would like to exchange views with someone. Would you want the weekly reports by the heads of Tax and Civil Divisions? I think and I am sure the other Cabinet members would like to get some guidelines.⁶

Questions about what to include were not limited to the Department of Justice. Most of the agencies deliberated the same question: What exactly is important in the history of the administration? The coordinating committee was to help solve this problem by reviewing the lists submitted by the agencies. The next step was to send microfilm teams to each agency from the NARS, with the exception of five agencies that used their own film crews.

On January 18, 1964, the Washington Post provided some insight into the project as a whole, specifically the filming of the Civil Rights Division of the Department of Justice:

The Federal Government began to turn itself upside down this week in a massive effort to put on microfilm the official records of the Kennedy Administration. . . .

Other presidential libraries contain the personal papers of the President, the files of the White House, personal papers of friends and associates and some kinds of audio-visual materials, "but no official Government records. . . ."

So yesterday, as they had done all week and as they would continue to do for no-one-knows-how-long, a group of microfilmmers from the National Archives processed the records that Department heads had designated as relevant to Mr. Kennedy's main interests.⁷

Unlike the filming of retired records, the filming of much of this material included active files still used by the agencies in question. Therefore, records were not removed to other locations but instead were filmed in and around the daily working offices. The filming continued at the other agencies in the same way and ran smoothly considering the obvious organizational obstacles. However, when the film crews encountered restricted or classified materials, many of the agencies refused to cooperate, citing Section 7 (c) of Executive Order 10501 as their justification. This order provides safeguards for the administration, access, and copying of classified materials. Agency heads refused to permit microfilming without presidential authorization.

In July, President Johnson was unwilling to issue authorization. Department of Justice attorneys then determined that section 7(c) was not applicable to the acquisition of documents for archival purposes, and therefore neither the approval of the originating agency nor of the president was necessary.⁸ Filming resumed shortly. By mid-1964 over two million pages of documents had been microfilmed.

THE COLLECTIONS TODAY

Presently, the John F. Kennedy Library's holdings are partially comprised of 2,573 rolls of federal records. Thirty-nine federal records collections were acquired in microfilm and 14 in hard copy. Twenty-three collections of personal papers were obtained in microfilm, with the remaining 147 collections in hard copy. Sixty percent of the rolls of microfilm remain closed.

Each agency's files consist of a variety of materials. General collection policy guidelines provided an outline as to the types of materials desired, but individual agencies were given the latitude to select documents that fit into the guidelines. Each collection emphasizes various subjects and is organized differently. For example, the U.S. Department of the Interior records are comprised of files from several offices, including legislation papers from the Office of the Solicitor, Fish and Wildlife Service data on the use of pesticides, and Bureau of Indian Affairs records containing task force minutes and publications.

The Department of Health, Education, and Welfare (HEW) collection includes files of several task forces, committees, and legislation enacted on subjects such as education, welfare, the National Service Corps, and mental retardation. For some subjects, such as the HEW mental retardation files, the microfilm offers the library's most complete resource of background material and working files on the President's Panel on Mental Retardation and the Secretary's Committee on Mental Retardation. This file includes the proposed commission, selection of panel members, meetings, and conference recommendations. In conjunction with these files a researcher could then refer to the library's nonmicrofilm collections of President's Office Files, the personal papers of Elizabeth Boggs, and the staff files of Myer Feldman and Stafford Warren.

The holdings of the Kennedy Library also contain the files of the President's Commission on the Status of Women and several oral history interviews involving the issue of equal pay. The Women's Bureau records from the U.S. Department of Labor collection also present further information. The files include state programs, legislative proposals, and background materials on the Equal Pay Act of 1961.

Often the microfilm collections not only provide background information complementing existing files but also serve as a primary source on a particular topic. The U.S. Housing and Home

Finance Agency files on the legislative history of the Housing Act of 1961 are more detailed than the other collections on the housing issue. Records of the U.S. Office of Emergency Planning also provide a firsthand look at the government's response to natural disasters nationwide.

The papers and records of Walter Heller are also distinctive. This collection provides both the files of the Council of Economic Advisers and government committees, as well as his personal files from 1941 to 1971. Researchers interested in the economic policies of the Kennedy administration should regard these files as a critical resource.

Sometimes a subject is included in more than one microfilm collection. For example, if a researcher is interested in examining the Kennedy administration's approach to youth services and programs, aside from the president's papers and selected personal papers, he should also examine the following HEW records: committee files and legislative data on juvenile delinquency and on school dropouts; public assistance programs, including Aid to Dependent Children; legislation details on tax deductions for child-care expenses; models and background information on the National Service Corps; and reports and summaries of other action programs. The Department of the Interior records provide further details on youth employment, with specific emphasis on the Youth Conservation Corps, and a legislative history of the act establishing the Corps. The Department of Labor files provide data on the Youth Employment Act of 1961, the President's Committee on Youth Employment, as well as the 1960 White House Conference on Children and Youth.

These and other collections offer important insights into the Kennedy administration's response to the domestic problems of the early 1960s. From a historian's perspective, an agency's records can offer a unique view into how and why certain issues were important, how they were handled, to whom they were referred, and how they were solved. The agency records supplement files of administration personnel and demonstrate the implementation of the Kennedy administration's policies by the bureaucracy. Many times even the personal papers of agency heads do not offer a complete perspective of the agency itself. Just as research would be incomplete if the papers of key administration personnel were not examined for a particular project so, too, would research that did not include a review of the agency files. Such an examination of the agency's working records presents a more complete picture of historical discussion.

Scope and Content Note

THE COUNCIL OF ECONOMIC ADVISERS (CEA) files of Walter W. Heller cover the period from 1961 to 1964 with a few documents from the late 1950s and 1960. Although the title frame is dated April 1964, the material goes through November 1964.

During this period, Dr. Heller served as the White House economic adviser to both Presidents Kennedy and Johnson and as chairman of the CEA. In the latter capacity he headed the other two members of the Council, a supporting professional secretarial and clerical staff and a changing cast of economic consultants.

In this dual role he chaired and served on many government committees (e.g., the Cabinet Committee on Economic Growth); headed a personal informational and advisory service for the president; functioned as the government liaison with business, labor, and consumer advisory groups; supervised the preparation of an annual economic message and report; testified before Congress; and delivered many speeches on behalf of the CEA.

The files document the activities of the Council in general and of Dr. Heller in particular as well as Dr. Heller's personal associations with his friends and colleagues and participation in professional organizations. Duplication and overlapping in the files clearly reflect the extensive overlapping of Dr. Heller and the Council's functions.

The files are broken down into series either by subject, chronologically or generically by type of item (e.g., staff memoranda); the subject breakdown is the most frequent. There is a great deal of repetition across categories. Because the material was microfilmed in its original working order, the order has not been altered despite the following inconsistencies.

Arrangement of the series follows no definite pattern and at least one series, Steel, is seriously misfiled. Filing within series themselves is often haphazard. When there is a recognizable order within a series, folders are still often misfiled. Occasionally the contents of a folder are misfiled. There are quite a few empty folders, which are marked as such on the folder title list following. Folders are often filed within folders without an indication of where the insert ends and the other folder resumes. Such inserts are only included on the folder title list if they are completely unrelated to the folder in which they are filed.

ABOUT THE RECORDS

The researcher will find the records reproduced in this 49-roll microfilm set organized by series. A complete list and description of these series appears on page 3 before the roll contents begin on page 11. The roll contents list folder titles within each series.

Some of the microfilm rolls in the collection are not included in this collection because they contain security-classified information. These rolls are noted and described in the roll contents.

Scholarly Resources has condensed some of the shorter microfilm rolls of this collection. In the roll contents, roll numbers are listed under two columns: "SR Roll No." and "JFKL Roll No." The "SR Roll No." appears on the box label as well as on the opening targets. The "JFKL Roll No." is the roll number of the set found at the John F. Kennedy Presidential Library in Boston. They are included in this guide as a reference for researchers who may consult with or travel to the library and use that set.

Description of Series

Note: Dashes (—) listed below indicate classified rolls. None of these rolls appears in the Scholarly Resources edition.

SR Roll No.	JFKL Roll No.
1-13	1-14	Miscellaneous Correspondence, 1961-1964. 14 rolls. This series contains correspondence with the clippings, reprints, and reports, especially outside commercial reports, that were sent as enclosures, arranged by year and then alphabetically by correspondent. The letters are from the general public, peripheral acquaintances, and from businessmen. They were addressed to the White House, sometimes the President specifically, or to the CEA directly. They are either requests for economic information, commentaries on the economy, or employment inquiries.
13-16	15-18	Correspondence with Individuals, 1961-1964. 4 rolls. This series contains correspondence with enclosures of articles and reports filed alphabetically by correspondent with a folder for each correspondent. This is the more important correspondence with more important people (other economists, government figures and friends, both in the United States and abroad) than the Miscellaneous Correspondence series above.
16-18	19, 21-24	Correspondence with Other Federal Agencies, 1961-1964. 5 rolls. This series contains correspondence with and schedules, charts, reports, printed material, and press releases from other government agencies. This material is arranged alphabetically by agency, with each agency having its own folder, and generally chronologically within each folder. Most of this material is the more routine interagency correspondence and agency handouts. U.S. Chamber of Commerce material is mistakenly filed here.
—	20	Steel, 1963-1964. 1 roll. This series contains memoranda, notes (some handwritten), reports, articles, and correspondence on the steel situation in general and documenting specific meetings on the situation. This is a very detailed file on the steel crisis; it is, however, very rough and there are many gaps. Much of the material is in Dr. Heller's handwriting.
19-28	25-39	Subject File, 1961-1964. 15 rolls. This series contains correspondence, reports, articles, memoranda, printed materials, handwritten notes, press releases, and drafts of speeches and articles on a great variety of subjects and a smaller

number of organizations, publications, and radio and television programs. The material is divided up by subject with a folder for each subject and then generally filed alphabetically by folder title. However, some of the material is filed greatly out of order and many of the subjects overlap. There is little continuity in the use of folder titles. A title, or subject category, was frequently used for a short time; when material on that same topic next came to the file it was likely to be filed under a different topic as often as not. The researcher should therefore review all the folder titles, not just the likely ones.

Comments on Legislation, 1961-1964. 6 rolls.

This series contains legislative referral memos from the Bureau of the Budget; the resulting formal CEA opinions on legislation; a small amount of correspondence relating to legislation, some from Congressmen; drafts and reprints of bills at all stages of passage; and miscellaneous material relating to specific pieces of legislation. The series begins with a general chronological file and a file of copies of miscellaneous legislation. There is a file of general material—background, draft and final—for the legislative programs each year. The remainder and the bulk of the series consists of folders containing assorted material on specific pieces of legislation and at least one executive order. These are very roughly arranged in reverse chronological order by year but not by month.

At the end of the series there is a small number of folders labeled by subject, e.g., Antitrust Cases. These folders contain the same type of material as the earlier ones but have a greater amount of background material, articles, and reports. Because this material is followed by the personal correspondence and personnel files of Joseph Walka, it may be the background material that Walka planned to leave for his successor.

—	48-55

Meetings and Public Appearances, 1961;
Meetings, 1962-1964. 10 rolls.

This series contains correspondence, texts and drafts of speeches, reports, memos, preparatory material, schedules, programs, articles, and handwritten notes relating to meetings—both foreign and domestic, governmental and private—attended by or at which speeches were given by a Council member. There is a folder for each speech or appearance and these are filed in very rough chronological order by the date of the event.

36-37	56-62

Chron Files, 1961-1964. 7 rolls.

The bulk of this series is a straight correspondence file of the letters, memos, and lists originating in the CEA arranged in reverse chronological order. There is no file for July 1962. Within this series there is a subseries of Black Books which seems to consist of correspondence with well-known people. Although the Chron Files from January 1961-December 1962 refer to the Black Books, these

SR	JFKL

Black Books were microfilmed for January-February 1962 and September-December 1962 only. There is also one file of these Memos for the President (General Subject), November-December 1961 which includes memos for the White House staff as well as for the President and which should be filed in the Memos for the President series (roll 92).

38-39	63-65

White House Referrals, 1961-1964. 3 rolls.

This series contains letters and telegrams with enclosures and covering memos which were referred by the White House to the CEA to either answer or draft suitable replies for White House signatures. The bulk of the material, 24 folders, is correspondence with the general public similar to the Miscellaneous Correspondence series, rolls 1-14. The correspondence is divided up alphabetically by the name of the correspondent with a folder for each letter. Within each folder the material is arranged roughly in reverse chronological order. The correspondence covers the period 1962-1964. The last half of the third roll consists of the subseries White House Signature: Drafts for. This material dates from 1961-1964, although very little is from 1964. This file is the correspondence, enclosures, covering memos, and draft replies for the more important correspondents, e.g., editors, publishers, Congressmen, and former and future government officials. The drafts are intended for signing by the White House staff in many instances.

39	66-70

Internal Correspondence - Staff members, Council of Economic Advisers, 1961-1964. 5 rolls.

This series contains memorandums from CEA staff members arranged in rough reverse chronological order and divided into four subseries: 1) CEA Staff and Council Members (Memos) covers the period 1961-1963; 2) The bulk of the file is filed by the name of the staff member with a folder (or more) for each staff member excluding Dr. Heller. These files cover 1961-1964 and include correspondence and reports as well as memos; 3) Intra-office Memoranda (other than CEA) contains two 1961 items: one misfiled letter and a memo; 4) The Staff Memos file consists of mostly 1963 memos, with additional items from 1961-1964.

—	71-72

Staff Memoranda, 1961-1964. 2 rolls.

This series contains memorandums originating in the CEA divided into files of memos relating to staff meetings and of memos filed by originator. Both sections are filed in reverse chronological order. The material on staff meetings dates from 1961-1964 and includes other correspondence and a small amount of background material, such as speech texts and articles, relating to the subject of the meeting. In the beginning of the series, without any folder differentiation, an internal administrative file begins after the staff meeting material, which consists of weekly reports by staff members. The remainder and bulk of the series is a file of staff memos arranged by the name of the originating staff member, covering the years 1961-1963. A small file of memos for the President or his staff and one for other government officials consists of short memos on aspects of the economic situation. The files of staff memos were bound in books covering different time spans and are much less complete than the Internal Correspondence files on rolls 66-70.

— 73

Cabinet Committee on Economic Growth, 1962-1963. 1 roll.

This series contains notes, correspondence, memos, reports, and background materials on the meetings of the committee filed by meeting date. The committee was established in August 1962 at President Kennedy's request. Members were the Chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, chairman; the Director of the Bureau of the Budget; and the Secretaries of Treasury, Commerce, and Labor. The original purpose of the committee was to develop a consensus on the size and overall composition of the 1962 tax cut. In 1964 the committee was interested in automation.

40 74

Committee on Economic Impact of Defense and Disarmament, 1963-1964. 1/4 roll.

This series contains correspondence, memos, reports, and press releases relating to the organization of the committee, which was established informally in July 1963. It was established formally in December 1963, and the bulk of the material covers the organization, staffing, and work between December 1963 and October 1964. Members of the committee were officials from the Departments of Defense, Commerce, and Labor, Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, AEC, NASA, Bureau of the Budget, OEP, Office of Science and Technology, and CEA, chairman. The purpose of the committee was to coordinate federal information and action on the economic impact of defense spending and changes therein. A 1961 letter from economists requesting the establishment of such a committee is included.

Committee on Federal Credit Programs, 1962-1963. 1/4 roll.

This series includes correspondence, memos, reports, drafts, schedules of meetings, and press releases relating to the writing of the report of the committee and the implementation of the report's recommendations.
