

The Samuel Adams Papers 1635-1826

---

Guide to the Scholarly Resources Microfilm Edition

From the Holdings of the Rare Books and Manuscripts
Division, Center for the Humanities, The New York
Public Library, Astor, Lenox and Tilden Foundations

SR Scholarly Resources Inc.
Wilmington, Delaware

Publisher's Note

Scholarly Resources does not claim copyright to this guide or to the microfilm collection it describes. Proprietary rights belong entirely to the Rare Books and Manuscripts Division, Center for the Humanities, The New York Public Library, Astor, Lenox and Tilden Foundations.

Acknowledgments

The publisher wishes to thank Mary B. Bowling, Karen Van Westering, Lisa Browar, and Duane Watson at The New York Public Library for their ideas, help, and effort in compiling the microfilm for this collection.

ISBN 0-8420-4155-9

Manufactured in the United States of America

First printing 1996

Distributed on microfilm by:

Scholarly Resources Inc.
104 Greenhill Avenue
Wilmington, DE 19805-1897

Distributed outside the USA

in Japan by:

Far Eastern Booksellers
P.O. Box 72
Kanda, Tokyo 101-91, JAPAN

in Taiwan by:

Transmission Books & Microforms Company Ltd.
P.O. Box 96-337
Taipei, TAIWAN, R.O.C.

Also available from Scholarly Resources: James Monroe Papers in Virginia Repositories (13 rolls); The James Monroe Papers, 1772-1836 (6 rolls); and The Jefferson Papers of the University of Virginia, 1732-1828 (10 rolls).

Contents

Introduction, 1

Scope and Content, 4

Reel Contents, 6

    Originals (1635–1826), 6

    Transcripts (1768–1803), 7

    Calendar of Samuel Adams Papers (1760–1803), 8

Introduction

Samuel Adams, patriot and Revolutionary statesman, played an important role in American politics for more than two decades. Beginning with resistance to the Stamp Act in 1765, Adams was instrumental in organizing resistance to British rule and in articulating the means by which it could be achieved. Older than most other revolutionaries, he was single-minded in his devotion to the cause in which he found expression for his energy and talent.

Adams was born in Boston on September 27, 1722. His father, a brewer and merchant, was a prominent Boston citizen, active in local politics. The younger Samuel Adams studied at the Boston Grammar School and then attended Harvard College, graduating in 1740. He received a Master of Arts from Harvard in 1743. Adams tried his hand at law, at newspaper publishing, and at brewing but found none of these careers satisfactory. Like his father, he was active in local politics. In 1747 he helped to form the Whipping Post Club and wrote articles for its publication, the Independent Advertiser. Later, in 1763 during his tenure as tax collector for the town of Boston, he joined the Caucus Club. Adams had become well known as a political writer by 1764 when the town commissioned him to write its letter of instruction to its representatives in the colonial legislature. The Sugar Act of 1764, imposed by Parliament in an attempt to reduce the debt incurred during the Seven Years' War and to raise revenue to support British troops stationed in America, gave Adams the perfect opportunity to further exercise his talent for political activism.

Adams long had been associated with the popular party opposing the old, established families of the Massachusetts Bay Colony who exercised most political power. The Sugar Act, and the Stamp Act of the following year, gave the popular party political leverage. Burdened by costs of the war and a shortage of hard currency, middle-class Americans resented the Stamp Act, which required government stamps to be applied to a variety of legal documents. Throughout the summer of 1765 waves of protest swept the colonies, often organized by the Sons of Liberty, of which Adams was a member. American merchants refused to import British goods, British entrepreneurs suffered, and American agents in London and English politicians declared the tax unenforceable. It was repealed in March 1766.

Adams was also instrumental in turning public opinion against the conservatives on the issue of the Stamp Act. In 1765 he again drafted instructions to the Boston representatives in the colonial legislature, then in September was elected to fill a vacancy in the House. While serving in the House, he wrote "Answer . . . to the Governor's Speech" and "Resolution of the House," thereby setting forth an early theory of American rights. Adams and his allies continued to gain political ground so that in 1766 the radicals were elected to a majority in the House of Representatives. Adams, too, was reelected and served until 1774 as clerk of the House, drafting most official documents of that body. Adams became the leader of the House radicals, writing many political documents for circulation throughout the colonies, stirring up resentment toward British troops which culminated in the Boston Massacre of 1770, and keeping up resistance to the Commissioners of the Customs appointed to collect Townshend duties. The Townshend Act of 1767 imposed duties on glass, lead, paints, paper, and tea imported to the American colonies, and the Commissioners could enforce the acts without the violators having recourse to trial by jury. The Massachusetts legislature was dismissed by Governor Thomas Hutchinson when it issued the Circular Letter, written by Adams, describing its actions against the Townshend Acts. The Circular Letter led the colonies to adopt the Non-Importation Agreements, which reduced colonial imports from Great Britain by half in 1768–69. In April 1770 all the Townshend Acts were repealed except the duty on tea.

During two years of conservatism after the repeal of the Townshend Acts, Adams kept the Revolutionary spirit alive. He contributed many articles to Boston newspapers, drawing public attention to subtle imperial injustices that were slowly combining to deprive colonists of their liberties. To resist this insidious tyranny, Adams began forming a committee of correspondence in the Massachusetts legislature in 1770 to communicate resistance to British abuses to other colonial legislatures. At a Boston town meeting in 1772, a committee of correspondence was created to draft a declaration of rights, and Adams was elected to it. By private correspondence, he already had prepared other towns for the project and had urged them to create similar committees. In the Boston Declaration of Rights, Adams placed more stress than ever on natural rights and on America's rightful legislative independence of Parliament.

On May 10, 1773, Parliament passed Lord North's Tea Act, which granted a virtual monopoly on tea importation in the colonies to the East India Company. Despite efforts by Adams and the Sons of Liberty to persuade him to refuse to land the tea, Governor Hutchinson remained steadfast in his intention to allow the tea to land at Boston Harbor. By November, Adams knew that the ships' arrivals could precipitate a crisis and began to organize resistance to the landing of the tea. At a mass meeting on December 16, 1773, upon receiving word that the governor would not allow the ships to return to England without landing their cargo, Adams gave the signal whereby the tea was dumped into Boston Harbor by the Sons of Liberty. This action confirmed Massachusetts's role as the core of the resistance to British rule and, as Adams had anticipated, brought on a crisis.

In retaliation for the Boston action, Parliament instituted what became known as the Coercive Acts, a series of measures designed to punish Massachusetts in general and Boston in particular for their resistance to parliamentary rule. Officially known as the Restraining Acts, the Coercive Acts included the Boston Port Bill, the Administration of Justice Act, the Massachusetts Government Act, and the Quartering Act. Adams led the resistance to these measures in Massachusetts. Other colonies, too, were outraged by the Quartering Act, which allowed Royal troops to be billeted in private homes throughout the colonies. To coordinate resistance the First Continental Congress convened in Philadelphia in September 1774. As a delegate from Massachusetts, Adams used his influence to commit Congress to the adoption of an association to enforce economic sanctions against Britain.

Adams was elected to the Second Continental Congress in May 1775. He favored immediate rebellion and in January 1776 proposed a confederation of the colonies ready for independence and supported the formation of independent state governments. He voted for and signed the Declaration of Independence. Adams was a member of the committee assigned to draft the Articles of Confederation and continued to serve in Congress until 1781, when he returned to Boston. In 1788 he was a member of the convention to ratify the Federal Constitution, which he initially opposed because he feared centralized government. From 1789 to 1793 he served as lieutenant governor under John Hancock, becoming governor upon Hancock's death in 1793. He was reelected in 1794 and served until 1797, when illness forced his retirement. He died in 1803.

Scope and Content

This collection consists of original papers, transcripts, and a calendar. The first owner of these papers was Samuel Adams Wells, Adams's earliest biographer. The historian George Bancroft acquired the papers after Wells's death in the midnineteenth century. The Lenox Library bought the Bancroft Collection of historical papers, which included the Adams material, from Bancroft's estate in 1893. It became part of The New York Public Library's collections in 1895, when the two libraries merged.

The Originals (1635–1826) document Adams's public activities and private life during the late colonial, Revolutionary, and post-Revolutionary periods and consist mainly of correspondence. Manuscripts of petitions, committee records, and other documents are also included. Major correspondents include Elizabeth Wells Adams, John Adams, Jeremy Belknap, James Bowdoin, Sir Archibald Campbell, Samuel Cooper, Eliphalet Dyer, Benjamin Franklin, Horatio Gates, Elbridge Gerry, Joseph Hawley, Thomas Jefferson, Benjamin Kent, the Marquis de Lafayette, Arthur Lee, Richard Henry Lee, James Lovell, Thomas McKean, Samuel Mather, Samuel Allyne Otis, Thomas Paine, Paul Revere, Darius Sessions, Artemas Ward, James Warren, Joseph Warren, George Washington, and Noah Webster. A significant amount of material, largely correspondence that is neither addressed to Samuel Adams nor written by him, is also included among these papers and dates from approximately 1635 to 1826 (the seventeenth-century items are later copies, not originals), with the bulk dating from 1760 to 1790. Included, among others, are letters by John Adams, John Quincy Adams, Samuel Adams, M.D., John Allan, Benedict Arnold, Benjamin Franklin, Elbridge Gerry, John Hancock, the Marquis de Lafayette, Richard Henry Lee, Peter Oliver, James Sullivan, and George Washington.

The second part of the collection, Transcripts (1768–1803), consists of five volumes of manuscript copies of the Samuel Adams Papers, of Massachusetts public documents, and of pseudonymous articles submitted to Boston newspapers that Samuel Adams Wells, under whose direction the transcripts were made in the early nineteenth century, had reason to believe were by Adams.

A two-volume Calendar, made by George D. Curtis in the early twentieth century while the papers were on deposit at The New York Public Library, provides a detailed inventory of the Samuel Adams

Papers between 1760 and 1803. The Calendar contains a synopsis of each item, indicating in some cases where the item was published. Synopses are arranged in chronological order. The indexes in the second volume of the calendar serve as the most complete indexes to the papers themselves. While this is a Calendar of the originals and not of the transcripts, Curtis included entries for transcripts that were not represented by originals in the papers. The Calendar is extensive, but it does not describe every item in the papers.

Reel Contents

Reel No.	Box No.	Contents
Originals (1635–1826)
1	1	Oct 1685 Extracts from Gov. Winthrop's MS History to "A Letter from the Country" to the Boston newspapers, 28 Dec 1772. Draft in handwriting of Samuel Adams.
	2	Draft of letter from Samuel Adams to Darius Sessions and others, Providence, R.I., 2 Jan 1773 to A.L.S. from Joseph Warren, Cambridge, to Samuel Adams, Philadelphia, 26 May 1775.
	3	A.L.S. from Charles Carter, Corotoman, Virginia, to Samuel Adams, Boston, 5 June 1775 to Letter from Thomas Walker to Samuel Adams, 30 May 1776.
2	3	A.L.S. from Joseph Hawley, Watertown, to Elbridge Gerry, Philadelphia, 2 and 6 June 1776 to Mock Petition to the King from the Episcopal Clergy of Connecticut and New York, 1776? Draft in handwriting of John Trumbull, the poet.
	4	A.L.S. from Joseph Ward, Boston, to Samuel Adams, Baltimore, 1 Jan 1777 to

Reel No.	Box No.	Contents
2	4	A.L.S. from Benjamin Palmer, New York, to I. Lawrence (?), New York, 1778.
	5	Draft of letter from Samuel Adams, Philadelphia, to Samuel Cooper, Boston, 3 Jan 1779 to Samuel Adams letter, written c. 1780.
3	6	A.L.S. from Elbridge Gerry, Marblehead, Mass., to Samuel Adams, Philadelphia, 8 Jan 1781 to A.L.S. from James Swan, Boston?, to Lt. Gov. Thomas Cushing and Samuel Adams, 1785?
	7	A.L.S. from P. J. Latombe, Paris, to Samuel Adams, Boston, 7 Feb 1786 to A.L.S. from Samuel Adams Wells, Boston, to Joseph Allen, Worcester, 9 Jan 1826, and undated papers.

Transcripts (1768–1803)

4	1	Papers of Samuel Adams, 1768–1771 8 Aug 1768, article for the Boston Gazette to 7 Oct 1771, article for the Boston Gazette .
	2	Papers of Samuel Adams, 1771–1774 14 Oct 1774, article for the Boston Gazette to 29 Sept 1774, letter from Benjamin Church to Samuel Adams.
	3	Papers of Samuel Adams, 1774–1777 10 Oct 1774, letter from John Pitts to Samuel Adams to

Reel No.	Box No.	Contents
4	3	23 Apr 1777, letter from Samuel Adams to Samuel Cooper.
	4	Papers of Samuel Adams, 1777–1779 12 May 1777, letter from Samuel Adams to General Green  to 15 Apr 1779, letter from Samuel Cooper to Samuel Adams.
	5	Papers of Samuel Adams, 1779–1803 29 Apr 1779, letter from Samuel Adams to Samuel Cooper  to 10 Oct 1803, clipping of “The Life of Samuel Adams,” by James Sullivan, (Boston) Independent Chronicle .
	5	Calendar of Samuel Adams Papers (1760–1803)