Economic Literature. 1851-1900
Publications from the Seligman Collection
at Columbia University

Introduction

In 1929, Columbia University embarked upon its first effort to acquire a major collection. The contents of the collection under consideration were formidable, comprising over 35,000 volumes on the history of economics in English, French, Spanish, German, and various other Western languages. Its range of material dated from as early as the fifteenth century and ended in the nineteenth. Generous offers to purchase the collection arrived from various quarters, most notably the governments of Japan and the Soviet Union, nations whose leaders and scholars had traditionally expressed an avowed interest in economic history. The collection itself rivaled in scope and content business history collections residing at Goldsmith's Library of Economic Literature at the University of London and the Kress Library of Business and Economics at Harvard University.

Notwithstanding the wide range of material contained in the Seligman Collection, it was thought wisest to focus in this microfilm publication on document published between 1851 and 1900, in light of the already extant microfilm publication Goldsmith's-Kress Library of Economic Literature, which comprehensively covers economic titles published between 1500 and 1850. As a consequence, this portion of the Seligman Collection, devoted as it is to the late nineteenth-century, opens a window onto this energetic period in the history of Western economics. The economic situation across the world was rapidly changing. The Industrial Revolution had gained in speed and strength, accelerated the rise of major corporations in the steel, railroad, communications, and oil industries. The accumulation of vast amounts of capital in the hands of large corporate entities similarly advanced the formalization of domestic stock trading and international economic relations.. Pitched battles over currency formats abounded; rapid increases in coal and iron production began to shape local and foreign economies; the evolution in trading markets prompted quasi-criminal efforts to manipulate commodity prices (such as the famous Gould-Fiske attempt to corner the gold market); nations began to implement an overlay of laws to administer social policy through financial measures, from passage within the United States of the National Banking Act of 1863 and the Internal Revenue Act of 1864 to the introduction in Germany of a state sickness program by Otto Von Bismarck in 1883; and the rush to exploit resources more cheaply elsewhere precipitated a colonialist frenzy that advanced the chartering of a new set of capital venture companies, such as the German East Africa Company (1885), the British Royal Niger Company (1886), the British East Africa Company (1887), and the British South Africa Company (1889) of Cecil Rhodes. This transformation in the world's economic situation is what Economic Literature, 1851-1900: Publications from the Seligman Collection at Columbia University chronicles.

To understand the nature of this collection, one ought also study the character of the collector. The collection had been the child of years of personal acquisition by Columbia University professor of economics Edwin Robert Anderson Seligman. So well known was the collection, that an apt description of it even makes its way into Joseph Dorfman's entry on Seligman in the Dictionary of American Biography (DAB, Supplements 1-2: To 1940, American Council of Learned Societies, 1944-1958):

Much interested in economic history, [Seligman] began early in his career to collect books, broadsides, letters, and manuscripts on economic thought and institutions, especially those written or printed in the sixteenth, seventeenth, and eighteenth centuries, and his holdings eventually grew into the most complete private collection of its kind in the world.

The collection underscored an intellectual voraciousness that characterized nearly every social and academic activity undertaken by its originator. In 1884, Seligman acquired degrees in law and economics from Columbia. He was promoted to full professor in 1891, and thirteen years later he received the McVickar Professorship of Political Economy, which he held until his retirement in 1931. From the moment he enrolled in Columbia University until his departure, Seligman established his credentials as a forward-thinking intellectual-reformer. His activities is literal litany of socially engaged intellectualism: he actively participated in the social settlement movement, founding Greenwich House and chairing its board of managers from 1906 to 1911; helped form the Educational Alliance to assist in the settlement of Russian-Jewish immigrants; acted as president of the Society for Ethical Culture from 1908 to 1921; served as chairman of the National League on Urban Conditions among Negroes (later renamed the National Urban League) from 1911 to 1914; set up the politically reform-minded Bureau of Municipal Research, the board of which he chaired from 1907 to 1910; served as a member of the Transportation Conference from 1919 to 1920, helping shape the Transportation Act of 1920; cofounded the American Economic Association, acting as its president from 1902 to 1904; actively promoted creation of the American Association of University Professors, over which he presided from 1919 to 1920; and oversaw as president the National Tax Association from 1913 to 1915.

A leading scholar in the area of public finance, Seligman advised the New York State and New York City tax commissions and acted as a consultant to the League of Nations Committee on Economics and Finance. Notwithstanding his unusually busy civic and academic obligations, Seligman published a number of important titles in the areas of taxation and economic history. His more prominent publications included his popular The Economic Interpretation of History (1902) and his Principles of Economics, with Special Reference to American Conditions (1905), which saw twelve editions. With regard to his specialty, Seligman dominated the field of taxation theory, having published a number of seminal early works, including On the Shifting and Incidence of Taxation (1892), Progressive Taxation in Theory and Practice (1894), Essays in Taxation (1895), and his most prominent work in the area, The Income Tax (1915). Seligman's published thought on taxation eventually came to influence federal tax policy and the progressive inheritance and income tax structures with which we live today.

As a collector, Seligman ranged far and wide with respect to the date, language, and type of the materials that he amassed. The late nineteenth-century portion of his collection, for example, comprise publications that range from local reports to broad overviews. They include abstract analyses such as Hutcheson Posnett's Theory of Ricardian Rent (1884), an 1869 report on the financing of the Central Railroad in Iowa, the textbook title Henry Macleod's Economics for Beginners (1879), Alphonso Hopkins's social polemic Wealth and Waste: The Principles of Political Economy in Their Application to the Present Problems of Labor, Law, and Liquor (1895), and political speeches, such as U.S. Representative Washington Townsend's The Causes of the Late Panic, the Dangers of Inflation, and the Remedy for Our Financial Troubles (1874).

The Seligman Collection also satisfies the scholarly demand for variety in the range of topics covered by its holdings. Much of the nineteenth-century portion of the collection, for example, illustrates Seligman's own intellectual interests and upbringing. The child of a banker and an engaged social reformer, Seligman amassed a number of titles on banking history, systems, and reform, including such titles as William John Lawson's History of Banking (London, 1850), the anonymously authored Reorganisation des Banques: Legalite et Urgence d'Une Reforme (Paris, 1864), Henry Felt Baker's Banks and banking in the United States (Philadelphia, 1853), Thomas Tooke's On the Bank Charter Act of 1844, Its Principles and Operation with Suggestions for an Improved Administration of the Bank of England (London, 1856), and David de Cholet's Regeneration Financiere: Ou, L'argent a Bon Marche. Nouveau Systeme de Banque Territoriale, Appelee a Remplacer le Credit Foncier de France... (Paris, 1855).

As a professor with expertise in finances, Seligman recognized as well the importance of debates over currency format (such as the conflict over hard specie and paper money), the increased interest in theories of valuation, and the emerging issue of foreign exchange rates, all represented in such titles as John Ramsay McCulloch's Essays on Interest, Exchange, Coins, Paper Money, and Banks (Philadelphia, 1851), Henry Dunning Macleod's The Theory and Practice of Banking; with the Elementary Principles of Currency; Prices; Credit; and Exchanges (London, 1855), Edwin Hill's Principles of Currency, Means of Ensuring Uniformity of Value and Adequacy of Supply (London, 1856), Jules Francois Jacquot-Rouhier Andelarre's, Finances de l'Empire (Paris, 1862), and Jacob Lyman Greene's Bimetallism, or, the Double Standard (Hartford, CT, 1893).

Moreover, Seligman's concern with the effect of newly emergent manufacturing and service industries on worker's rights (he was perhaps the earliest advocate of payment of a "living wage") and the evolution of unionism encouraged him to collect titles that addressed the impact of the Industrial Revolution on the political and social conditions of nineteenth-century workers, factory owners, and national economies. Not surprisingly, the Seligman Collection is rife with such titles as William Larrabee's The Railroad Question: A Historical and Practical Treatise on Railroads, and Remedies for Their Abuses (Chicago, 1893), Aldace Freeman Walker's Should Congress Legislate on the Subject of Railway Rates? (n.p., 1897), Lorin Blodget's The Social Condition of the Industrial Classes of Philadelphia, (Philadelphia, 1883), and F.W. Taussig's Protection to Young Industries As Applied in the United States (Cambridge, MA, 1883)

Nineteenth-century titles within the Seligman collection also fall beyond these personal areas of interest and include topics that lie slightly off the beaten track. Some of the more unusual titles include works on the Canadian fur trade (William Beckles' The Great Company; Being a History of the Honourable Company of Merchants-Adventurers Trading into Hudson's Bay, 1899), radical politics (Jean Graves' Moribund Society and Anarchy, 1899), economic disaster (R. Arthur Arnold's The History of the Cotton Famine, from the Fall of Sumter to the Passing of the Public Works Act, 1864), land rights (William E. Bear's The Relations of Landlord and Tenant in England and Scotland, 1876), and economics and women (William Ingersoll Bowditch's Taxation of Women in Massachusetts, 1875).

For researchers seeking an entry into the world of the late nineteenth century and the hustle and bustle of debate over the future of agriculture, the payment of workers, the rewriting of tax codes, the advancement of colonial interests, the reigning in of cartels and banks, and much else, Economic Literature, 1851-1900: Publications from the Seligman Collection at Columbia University stands before them as that doorway in. As publishers of this collection, Primary Source Microfilm ultimately believes that understanding the tragedies and triumphs of the economic past may well teach us what lies ahead in an often mysterious, at times vertiginous economic future.

Editor's Note

Economic Literature, 1851-1900: Publications from the Seligman Collection at Columbia University is a microfilm publication that will be published in units of the 50 reels of microfilm each. A collection guide shall be published periodically covering one or more units. A cumulative guide shall be produced as well by the end of the microfilm project.

Each guide lists titles in three formats: Main Entry; Country-Year; and Reel. The Main Entry index lists all titles in alphabetical order by name of author first and title of publication next. The Country-Year index lists all titles by country of publication first, year of publication next, and author name last. The Reel index lists all titles in the order in which they appear on the reel.

In this particular guide, reel numbers 1-50 comprise Unit 1, while reel numbers 51-100 comprise Unit 2.

Acknowledgments

The project would not have been possible without assistance from many individuals. Primary Source Microfilm wishes to thank Frank Menchaca, who first recognized the value of this collection; Jean W. Ashton and Rudolph Ellenbogen for making this microfilm publication possible; Jane Siegel for diligently overseeing the workflow process and reviewing titles for filming; Hannah Kent for providing much-needed assistance in retrieval and record-keeping; Nathalie Duval for her editorial wisdom and managerial acumen as Primary Source Microfilm's editorial representative to the project; Monty Cornell and Errol Williams for their invaluable microfilming expertise; Robert Wolven and Gary Bertchume for their kind assistance in providing the records that have made this finding aid possible; Barbara Pandaru for her nimble-fingered contribution in the keying of card catalog records; and Jim Zelem and Colleen Mullin for their kind help in seeing this project through the production process.
