COLLECTION OVERVIEW

Adlai E. Stevenson (1900-1965), presidential candidate in 1952 and 1956, was the leading Democrat and a major figure in American politics and diplomacy during the Cold War years. As U.S. ambassador to the United Nations under Presidents John F. Kennedy and Lyndon Johnson, he negotiated the U.S. position through the Cuban Missile Crisis and Cold War relations with the Soviet Union. This collection is composed of three parts: his correspondence over his long career in public service; his papers on his involvement in the United Nations; and selected subject files illuminating other important aspects of his political career.

Stevenson's correspondence, organized alphabetically by person, is a valuable resource for documenting all aspects of his life and career. It provides rich documentation for his political activities during the 1950s and his involvement in international affairs in the 1950s and first half of the 1960s. It sheds light on policy-making in the Kennedy and Johnson administrations as well the many political and literary figures he counted as his friends and colleagues. Many leading figures of the Democratic Party are represented in the correspondence, including Eleanor Roosevelt, Harry S. Truman, the Kennedys, J. William Fulbright, Edmund G. Brown, and others. Their correspondence reveals Stevenson's role as the titular head of the Democratic Party for most of the 1950s, as well as his tireless support and interest in Democratic officeholders and candidates throughout the country. Stevenson's enormous popularity with people of all ages and socioeconomic backgrounds is evidenced in his responses to letters from the general public. He was quite candid in his correspondence and sometimes embarrassingly honest and self-effacing.

A key component of this collection is Stevenson's involvement in the UN. These materials document two diverse periods: his involvement in the organization of the United Nations immediately following World War II, and his service to the United Nations as United States ambassador from 1961 until his death in 1965. The UN papers are arranged alphabetically by folder title and provide the full record of Stevenson's involvement with the Cuban Missile Crisis, where, after the US discovered offensive nuclear weapons in Cuba, he confronted Soviet Ambassador Valerian Zorin in an emergency meeting of the Security Council, challenged him to admit that the offensive weapons had been placed in Cuba, and declared that he was prepared to wait "until Hell freezes over" for Zorin's answer. In addition to the Cuban Missile Crisis, Stevenson played a leadership role in UN disputes in Cyprus, Congo, Israel, and Vietnam. Previously classified documents, released in 1987 by the State Department, are fully integrated into his UN papers. Particularly significant are Stevenson's handwritten notes, taken during meetings with the Secretary General, President, and the Security Council.

Selections from the subject files include correspondence, reference materials, news clippings, meeting minutes, agendas, and other materials documenting other aspects of Stevenson's professional life, particularly his government service during the New Deal and World War II and his political activities outside his presidential campaign

INTRODUCTION

The large Adlai Stevenson II archive at Princeton University's Mudd Library has been skillfully organized by its staff and selectively microfilmed by Primary Source Microfilm. This collaborative effort illuminates his public and private lives, as well as many issues and personalities of his time. This commendable effort preserves and makes the archive widely available while weeding out material of secondary interest which remains available at the Library to interested researchers. The only official papers of Adlai II's not housed at Princeton are documents from his years as Governor of Illinois (1949-1952); these were segregated and consigned by the Stevenson family to the Illinois Historical Library in Springfield where they, too, have been capably managed and are accessible along with other family archives, some of which reference Adlai II.

Early Career and Influences

A child of the American heartland and center of isolationism, the Guv, as he was known to close friends, was from the beginning a peripatetic student and citizen of the world. As a student, he lived through World War I and pondered the military cemeteries in Europe. As a boy correspondent for the family-owned newspaper, the Bloomington Daily Pantagraph, he covered the early post-civil war Soviet Union, where he observed starving "street children." As a student at Princeton, he was influenced by Woodrow Wilson's internationalism, which postulated self-determination for all peoples and a League of Nations to resolve disputes peacefully and end war for all time. Wilson in some measure accounts for the internationalism which runs through the life depicted in these documents. As a young lawyer in Chicago, capital of midwestern isolationism, Adlai II led the Chicago Council on Foreign Relations and the William Allen White Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies.

We lived in Washington during the early New Deal years, from whence records have descended in this archive, and later when Pearl Harbor was attacked and the Guv was an Assistant to Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox, a Chicago Republican. No doubt the latter experience, which included trips to the Pacific theatre and, near war's end, assignments in Europe, sharpened his distaste for war and his commitment to the rebirth of Wilson's internationalism and, in particular, the United Nations. The Guv served in the US delegation to the 1945 San Francisco conference which founded the UN. From then on, my memories supplement the documentary record, starting with his representation of the US on the Preparatory Commission of the UN in London later that year. We lived in a small house on a mews a stone's throw from Grosvenor Square where he would die twenty years later. Our little home in war-torn London became a nightly watering hole for great men excitedly laying the foundation for a new world order and the rebirth of Europe. Many years later, when I was a US Senator, I met with Andrei Gromyko, Foreign Minister of the Soviet Union, in his Kremlin lair. He recalled with uncharacteristic warmth those evenings in London. I recalled my mother attributing Gromyko's longevity to the vitamins she fed her guests. He saw no humor in the remark. Over many years and places around the world, the Guv collected and attracted a truly unique and vast assortment of friends, admirers, associates, and acquaintances. Through their correspondence, they come to life in this microfilm collection.

The political ethic and character of Adlai II which emerges from these documents owes much to the influence of another man. Politics is a hereditary risk in the Stevenson family. His grandfather, Adlai I, had been Vice-President in Grover Cleveland's second term, 1893 to 1897. His father, a dabbler in politics, was an Illinois Secretary of State. His inspiration was Lincoln, another product of the prairie, a constant presence in the family and revered above all others. Lincoln gave his sublime autobiography to great-great-grandfather Jesse Fell, founder of the Daily Pantagraph, who, having requested it from a reluctant Lincoln, used it to promote him for the Presidency. Fell also proposed the Lincoln-Douglas debates, which attracted national attention. Adlai II's eloquence and feeling, his use of anecdote and humor to make a point, are reminiscent of Lincoln – as is the ethic. "I must keep principle fixed within me," Lincoln said. The Guv did.

Governor and Presidential Candidate

Nineteen forty-eight was shaping up to be a bad year for the Democrats. The Illinois Regular Democratic Organization decided to stem the tide by heading its ticket with Adlai II for Governor and Professor Paul Douglas of the University of Chicago for Senator. Each had sought the other's nomination. But the party elders in their wisdom decided it was safer to trust the spoils in Springfield to the unknown quantity, Adlai II, than the known quantity, the Professor, a reform Chicago alderman, in case they were elected. Adlai II was elected Governor by the largest majority in Illinois history. Together he and Douglas carried Harry Truman to a narrow victory in Illinois and re-election to the Presidency.

As Governor, Adlai II was a reformer, but he won over the party elders led by Jacob (Jake) Arvey, Cook County Democratic chairman, who became an enthusiastic supporter thereafter. At the same time, he recruited an extraordinary cabinet and staff of prominent lawyers, academics, specialists in criminology, mental health and so on and began remaking state government. His efforts and success attracted national interest. Springfield became something of a Mecca for scholars, authors, politicians, journalists – people from everywhere curious about this anomalous character, a "striped pants" diplomat up to his eyeballs in politics and reforming a squalid state government. He was serving Illinois where the roots ran deep and the obligations were large and he rejoiced in the work, his hands on the levers of power. The characters in Illinois government reappear in the documents time and again over the years that followed. Some went with him from his administration into an irregular law practice during the Eisenhower interregnum and then into the Kennedy and Johnson administrations. The Guv remarked at his Senate confirmation hearing for Ambassador to the UN in 1961 that he regretted he had but one law firm to give to his country.

The roots and early years in Illinois are naturally not as fulsomely documented as the years beginning in 1952, his last as Governor and the year he was drafted by the Democratic Convention for President after an eloquent welcoming address to the Democratic National Convention in Chicago where he addressed the contenders, Vice-President Alben Barkley and Senator Richard Russell as "cousin." The Guv had entered no primaries and resisted all entreaties, including that of President Truman, who thought no better of him for it. He wanted to finish his work of reforming Illinois state government. Besides, he recognized that victory over a war hero would be difficult after twenty years of Democratic rule in Washington.

His campaign for the Presidency began at the Convention with no staff, no money, and no program, only a sturdy band of volunteers. After he secured the nomination, he and his staff went on to wage a campaign which in losing the election won the hearts and minds of people the world over and led to a second Presidential nomination in 1956 even though he had entered only three primaries. He stood for patriotism, which he called the "quiet steady dedication of a lifetime." Calling peace "a condition of human survival in the nuclear age," he supported the UN and international cooperation. He was committed to closing the gap between the "haves and the have nots," to arms control, including the nuclear test ban treaty, and to environmentalism, the "fragile space ship Earth with its vulnerable supplies of water, soil and air."

The documents in this collection highlight the difference between the politics of then and of now. In the Presidential campaigns of 1952 and 1956, the Guv would take half hour blocs of time on national television to deliver eloquent speeches on complex subjects to cheering partisans. To him, what won was more important than who won. Trust the people with the truth, he said, all the truth. The spontaneity and humor of a man who could trust his instincts and impulses comes through in these speeches.

Throughout his life the Guv attracted friends and admirers, the high and mighty, authors, political supporters, journalists, economists, officials, friends and the children of friends, with whom he corresponded regularly and intimately. From the earliest days and between campaigns, he was that peripatetic student of the world, rummaging in its markets and favelas to learn how people lived and in their ruins and monuments to discover their past. He once remarked that he wished he could find a mountain that his friend, Eleanor Roosevelt, had not climbed first. Everywhere he made friends and acquaintances (an appropriate number of enemies, too). After the 1952 election, he was received virtually everywhere in the world as something of a hero, an eloquent and good-natured embodiment of principles which made America secure, the leader of the "free world" and friend to the "third world."

Highlights of the Microfilm Collection

The notes, memos, and correspondence in this microfilm edition bring to life the events in which Adlai II played a role. They include the Bay of Pigs, Cuban Missile Crisis, admission of China to the UN, and Soviet arrears in the payment of UN dues. These documents go back to the 1930s, then forward to World War II, Korea, the founding of the UN and its early days, the Presidential campaigns, as well as his service at the UN. As titular leader of the Democratic Party, the Guv organized an Advisory Council which developed issues and policies for the Democratic Party often at odds with the Congressional leadership. The Advisory Council included familiar lawyer statesmen such as Thomas Finletter and George Ball, and economists John Kenneth Galbraith and Seymour Harris. The Guv headed a team which during John F. Kennedy's campaign for President quietly put together a report on foreign policy issues and options for the President-elect. In correspondence, reports, and notes such moments and endeavors come alive.

Not everything in Adlai II's life was political or official, however. From his early days at the Council on Foreign Relations and the Hull House Association in Chicago (the famous settlement house) he was active in companies, charities, and various civic organizations. His life was one of perpetual motion with little time for reading books and none wasted on spectator sports and entertainment, not after the 1930s when he had been known to ride the hounds. He was a director of the Pantagraph until I took over when he went to New York in 1961. In New York he became a director of the Field Foundation, the Eleanor Roosevelt Foundation, and the Encyclopedia Britannica (owned by his feisty friend, William Benton, a former Senator and State Department official). His travel as an author for Look magazine or lawyer for corporate clients, usually with one or more sons and a gaggle of friends in tow, emerges in more notes, articles, and correspondence.

This microfilm edition reflects this life and those of his admirers and friends. Among them are prominent women who befriended and supported an essentially lonely, single man. They include the redoubtable Agnes Meyer, her daughter Katherine (Kay) Graham, and her daughter Elizabeth (Lally) Weymouth – three generations. Mrs. Marshall (Ruth) Field was among his closest and most devoted friends, as were her daughters. Other close friends included Marietta Tree and her daughter, Frances Fitzgerald, renowned in her own right; and Jane Warner Dick from his earliest days in Illinois politics and, like Marietta, on the US delegation staff at the UN. All of these friends and colleagues come to life in this correspondence.

The correspondence is evocative. It cannot reveal all the underlying dynamics of the relationships. Barbara Ward, the brilliant, sprightly British economist and writer deeply committed to the “third world,” especially Africa, became an unofficial advisor and the closest thing he ever had to a ghostwriter. A guest at the family home in Libertyville, Illinois, known as the “farm,” she unfailingly arrived with a bottle of Dom Perignon for his infrequent visits to the place he loved best. In New York he overcompensated for that essentially lonely life with a social, “representational” life which went beyond the call of duty, and, I believe, shortened his life but added to his reservoir of friends, colleagues, and acquaintances, including many diplomats and world leaders.

The heart of the collection is the correspondence. Although it is sometimes perfunctory and formal on matters of official business, much of it is intimate and eloquent, a caring reflection of the times, the issues and their personalities, family responsibilities, and his devotion to people and their causes. His affection and support of family, especially three sons, is self-evident. He was, and appears, in this correspondence the most unaffected and generous of humans, never too busy or distracted for friends. The universality of his “constituency” is extraordinary, a hint of what the American statesman can be in an expectant world. His correspondence is not weighted with industrialists and financiers, but draws from the world of the arts (including admiring movie stars), journalism, law, theology, labor, social work, diplomacy and government, education, economics, philosophy, and philanthropy. From around the world this collection brings wise, good, and talented people to life, most allied by one means or another in common purpose with the Guv. Anyone seeking the obscene or even the unkind word will be disappointed. The comments from the Guv and his correspondents are bereft of self-interest or gratification, reflecting a different man – and time.

FORMAT

This guide lists materials in the order in which they appear on the reels.

NOTICE OF UNFILMED MATERIALS

Materials excluded from the series that have been published in this microfilm edition are noted in the entry for the file in which they are housed. These materials are available to researchers who use the collection on site at the Seeley G. Mudd Manuscript Library at Princeton University. Files excluded in their entirety are also listed in this collection guide. These files are available to researchers who use the collection on site at the Seeley G. Mudd Manuscript Library. Materials were excluded for one of two reasons:

Research Need

Certain materials were not microfilmed largely because of their relatively low priority with respect to research needs. Examples of such materials include several files entitled “Eccentrics,” which contain unsolicited nuisance letters.

Privacy

Some materials could not be microfilmed for reasons of confidentiality. In the interest of protecting the privacy of individuals, a concerted effort was made to exclude records that contained unsolicited resumes from job seekers and Social Security numbers.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The project would not have been possible without assistance from many individuals. Primary Source Microfilm wishes to thank Ben Primer, Associate University Librarian for Rare Books and Special Collections at Princeton University Library, for his commitment to making this collection widely available and his support of this project. We extend a debt of gratitude to Dan Linke, University Archivist and Curator of Public Policy Papers at the Seeley G. Mudd Manuscript Library at Princeton, for serving as project director at the Library, for his dedication to making the project run smoothly, his advice and counsel throughout the project, his unfailing good humor, responsiveness to myriad questions, and editorial skills. Special thanks go to former Senator Adlai E. Stevenson III for writing the introduction to this edition of his father's papers; his remarks provide insight and a personal perspective on his father's life, character, and career. At PSM, Bennett Lovett-Graff was instrumental in securing Princeton as a prospective publishing partner on this and other collections. Barbara Rader first recognized the value of this collection, pursued a contract for it, and served as PSM's editorial manager of the project. Thanks to PSM's manufacturing department for exemplary work: Barbara Phoenix, who served with dedication as manufacturing project manager; Tom Mahoney for masterfully filming this collection; and JoAnn Lebel for overseeing the smooth manufacturing operation. PSM's editorial aide, Kimberly White, meticulously reviewed all the files, prepared the materials, and helped to create the collection guide.

COLLECTION OVERVIEW

Adlai E. Stevenson (1900-1965), presidential candidate in 1952 and 1956, was the leading Democrat and a major figure in American politics and diplomacy during the Cold War years. As U.S. ambassador to the United Nations under Presidents John F. Kennedy and Lyndon Johnson, he negotiated the U.S. position through the Cuban Missile Crisis and Cold War relations with the Soviet Union. This collection is composed of three parts: his correspondence over his long career in public service; his papers on his involvement in the United Nations; and selected subject files illuminating other important aspects of his political career.

Stevenson's correspondence, organized alphabetically by person, is a valuable resource for documenting all aspects of his life and career. It provides rich documentation for his political activities during the 1950s and his involvement in international affairs in the 1950s and first half of the 1960s. It sheds light on policy-making in the Kennedy and Johnson administrations as well the many political and literary figures he counted as his friends and colleagues. Many leading figures of the Democratic Party are represented in the correspondence, including Eleanor Roosevelt, Harry S. Truman, the Kennedys, J. William Fulbright, Edmund G. Brown, and others. Their correspondence reveals Stevenson's role as the titular head of the Democratic Party for most of the 1950s, as well as his tireless support and interest in Democratic officeholders and candidates throughout the country. Stevenson's enormous popularity with people of all ages and socioeconomic backgrounds is evidenced in his responses to letters from the general public. He was quite candid in his correspondence and sometimes embarrassingly honest and self-effacing.

A key component of this collection is Stevenson's involvement in the UN. These materials document two diverse periods: his involvement in the organization of the United Nations immediately following World War II, and his service to the United Nations as United States ambassador from 1961 until his death in 1965. The UN papers are arranged alphabetically by folder title and provide the full record of Stevenson's involvement with the Cuban Missile Crisis, where, after the US discovered offensive nuclear weapons in Cuba, he confronted Soviet Ambassador Valerian Zorin in an emergency meeting of the Security Council, challenged him to admit that the offensive weapons had been placed in Cuba, and declared that he was prepared to wait "until Hell freezes over" for Zorin's answer. In addition to the Cuban Missile Crisis, Stevenson played a leadership role in UN disputes in Cyprus, Congo, Israel, and Vietnam. Previously classified documents, released in 1987 by the State Department, are fully integrated into his UN papers. Particularly significant are Stevenson's handwritten notes, taken during meetings with the Secretary General, President, and the Security Council.

Selections from the subject files include correspondence, reference materials, news clippings, meeting minutes, agendas, and other materials documenting other aspects of Stevenson's professional life, particularly his government service during the New Deal and World War II and his political activities outside his presidential campaign.

INTRODUCTION

The large Adlai Stevenson II archive at Princeton University's Mudd Library has been skillfully organized by its staff and selectively microfilmed by Primary Source Microfilm. This collaborative effort illuminates his public and private lives, as well as many issues and personalities of his time. This commendable effort preserves and makes the archive widely available while weeding out material of secondary interest which remains available at the Library to interested researchers. The only official papers of Adlai II's not housed at Princeton are documents from his years as Governor of Illinois (1949-1952); these were segregated and consigned by the Stevenson family to the Illinois Historical Library in Springfield where they, too, have been capably managed and are accessible along with other family archives, some of which reference Adlai II.

Early Career and Influences

A child of the American heartland and center of isolationism, the Guv, as he was known to close friends, was from the beginning a peripatetic student and citizen of the world. As a student, he lived through World War I and pondered the military cemeteries in Europe. As a boy correspondent for the family-owned newspaper, the Bloomington Daily Pantagraph, he covered the early post-civil war Soviet Union, where he observed starving "street children." As a student at Princeton, he was influenced by Woodrow Wilson's internationalism, which postulated self-determination for all peoples and a League of Nations to resolve disputes peacefully and end war for all time. Wilson in some measure accounts for the internationalism which runs through the life depicted in these documents. As a young lawyer in Chicago, capital of midwestern isolationism, Adlai II led the Chicago Council on Foreign Relations and the William Allen White Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies.

We lived in Washington during the early New Deal years, from whence records have descended in this archive, and later when Pearl Harbor was attacked and the Guv was an Assistant to Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox, a Chicago Republican. No doubt the latter experience, which included trips to the Pacific theatre and, near war's end, assignments in Europe, sharpened his distaste for war and his commitment to the rebirth of Wilson's internationalism and, in particular, the United Nations. The Guv served in the US delegation to the 1945 San Francisco conference which founded the UN. From then on, my memories supplement the documentary record, starting with his representation of the US on the Preparatory Commission of the UN in London later that year. We lived in a small house on a mews a stone's throw from Grosvenor Square where he would die twenty years later. Our little home in war-torn London became a nightly watering hole for great men excitedly laying the foundation for a new world order and the rebirth of Europe. Many years later, when I was a US Senator, I met with Andrei Gromyko, Foreign Minister of the Soviet Union, in his Kremlin lair. He recalled with uncharacteristic warmth those evenings in London. I recalled my mother attributing Gromyko's longevity to the vitamins she fed her guests. He saw no humor in the remark. Over many years and places around the world, the Guv collected and attracted a truly unique and vast assortment of friends, admirers, associates, and acquaintances. Through their correspondence, they come to life in this microfilm collection.

The political ethic and character of Adlai II which emerges from these documents owes much to the influence of another man. Politics is a hereditary risk in the Stevenson family. His grandfather, Adlai I, had been Vice-President in Grover Cleveland's second term, 1893 to 1897. His father, a dabbler in politics, was an Illinois Secretary of State. His inspiration was Lincoln, another product of the prairie, a constant presence in the family and revered above all others. Lincoln gave his sublime autobiography to great-great-grandfather Jesse Fell, founder of the Daily Pantagraph, who, having requested it from a reluctant Lincoln, used it to promote him for the Presidency. Fell also proposed the Lincoln-Douglas debates, which attracted national attention. Adlai II's eloquence and feeling, his use of anecdote and humor to make a point, are reminiscent of Lincoln – as is the ethic. "I must keep principle fixed within me," Lincoln said. The Guv did.

Governor and Presidential Candidate

Nineteen forty-eight was shaping up to be a bad year for the Democrats. The Illinois Regular Democratic Organization decided to stem the tide by heading its ticket with Adlai II for Governor and Professor Paul Douglas of the University of Chicago for Senator. Each had sought the other's nomination. But the party elders in their wisdom decided it was safer to trust the spoils in Springfield to the unknown quantity, Adlai II, than the known quantity, the Professor, a reform Chicago alderman, in case they were elected. Adlai II was elected Governor by the largest majority in Illinois history. Together he and Douglas carried Harry Truman to a narrow victory in Illinois and re-election to the Presidency.

As Governor, Adlai II was a reformer, but he won over the party elders led by Jacob (Jake) Arvey, Cook County Democratic chairman, who became an enthusiastic supporter thereafter. At the same time, he recruited an extraordinary cabinet and staff of prominent lawyers, academics, specialists in criminology, mental health and so on and began remaking state government. His efforts and success attracted national interest. Springfield became something of a Mecca for scholars, authors, politicians, journalists – people from everywhere curious about this anomalous character, a "striped pants" diplomat up to his eyeballs in politics and reforming a squalid state government. He was serving Illinois where the roots ran deep and the obligations were large and he rejoiced in the work, his hands on the levers of power. The characters in Illinois government reappear in the documents time and again over the years that followed. Some went with him from his administration into an irregular law practice during the Eisenhower interregnum and then into the Kennedy and Johnson administrations. The Guv remarked at his Senate confirmation hearing for Ambassador to the UN in 1961 that he regretted he had but one law firm to give to his country.

The roots and early years in Illinois are naturally not as fulsomely documented as the years beginning in 1952, his last as Governor and the year he was drafted by the Democratic Convention for President after an eloquent welcoming address to the Democratic National Convention in Chicago where he addressed the contenders, Vice-President Alben Barkley and Senator Richard Russell as "cousin." The Guv had entered no primaries and resisted all entreaties, including that of President Truman, who thought no better of him for it. He wanted to finish his work of reforming Illinois state government. Besides, he recognized that victory over a war hero would be difficult after twenty years of Democratic rule in Washington.

His campaign for the Presidency began at the Convention with no staff, no money, and no program, only a sturdy band of volunteers. After he secured the nomination, he and his staff went on to wage a campaign which in losing the election won the hearts and minds of people the world over and led to a second Presidential nomination in 1956 even though he had entered only three primaries. He stood for patriotism, which he called the "quiet steady dedication of a lifetime." Calling peace "a condition of human survival in the nuclear age," he supported the UN and international cooperation. He was committed to closing the gap between the "haves and the have nots," to arms control, including the nuclear test ban treaty, and to environmentalism, the "fragile space ship Earth with its vulnerable supplies of water, soil and air."

The documents in this collection highlight the difference between the politics of then and of now. In the Presidential campaigns of 1952 and 1956, the Guv would take half hour blocs of time on national television to deliver eloquent speeches on complex subjects to cheering partisans. To him, what won was more important than who won. Trust the people with the truth, he said, all the truth. The spontaneity and humor of a man who could trust his instincts and impulses comes through in these speeches.

Throughout his life the Guv attracted friends and admirers, the high and mighty, authors, political supporters, journalists, economists, officials, friends and the children of friends, with whom he corresponded regularly and intimately. From the earliest days and between campaigns, he was that peripatetic student of the world, rummaging in its markets and favelas to learn how people lived and in their ruins and monuments to discover their past. He once remarked that he wished he could find a mountain that his friend, Eleanor Roosevelt, had not climbed first. Everywhere he made friends and acquaintances (an appropriate number of enemies, too). After the 1952 election, he was received virtually everywhere in the world as something of a hero, an eloquent and good-natured embodiment of principles which made America secure, the leader of the "free world" and friend to the "third world."

Highlights of the Microfilm Collection

The notes, memos, and correspondence in this microfilm edition bring to life the events in which Adlai II played a role. They include the Bay of Pigs, Cuban Missile Crisis, admission of China to the UN, and Soviet arrears in the payment of UN dues. These documents go back to the 1930s, then forward to World War II, Korea, the founding of the UN and its early days, the Presidential campaigns, as well as his service at the UN. As titular leader of the Democratic Party, the Guv organized an Advisory Council which developed issues and policies for the Democratic Party often at odds with the Congressional leadership. The Advisory Council included familiar lawyer statesmen such as Thomas Finletter and George Ball, and economists John Kenneth Galbraith and Seymour Harris. The Guv headed a team which during John F. Kennedy's campaign for President quietly put together a report on foreign policy issues and options for the President-elect. In correspondence, reports, and notes such moments and endeavors come alive.

Not everything in Adlai II's life was political or official, however. From his early days at the Council on Foreign Relations and the Hull House Association in Chicago (the famous settlement house) he was active in companies, charities, and various civic organizations. His life was one of perpetual motion with little time for reading books and none wasted on spectator sports and entertainment, not after the 1930s when he had been known to ride the hounds. He was a director of the Pantagraph until I took over when he went to New York in 1961. In New York he became a director of the Field Foundation, the Eleanor Roosevelt Foundation, and the Encyclopedia Britannica (owned by his feisty friend, William Benton, a former Senator and State Department official). His travel as an author for Look magazine or lawyer for corporate clients, usually with one or more sons and a gaggle of friends in tow, emerges in more notes, articles, and correspondence.

This microfilm edition reflects this life and those of his admirers and friends. Among them are prominent women who befriended and supported an essentially lonely, single man. They include the redoubtable Agnes Meyer, her daughter Katherine (Kay) Graham, and her daughter Elizabeth (Lally) Weymouth – three generations. Mrs. Marshall (Ruth) Field was among his closest and most devoted friends, as were her daughters. Other close friends included Marietta Tree and her daughter, Frances Fitzgerald, renowned in her own right; and Jane Warner Dick from his earliest days in Illinois politics and, like Marietta, on the US delegation staff at the UN. All of these friends and colleagues come to life in this correspondence.

The correspondence is evocative. It cannot reveal all the underlying dynamics of the relationships. Barbara Ward, the brilliant, sprightly British economist and writer deeply committed to the “third world,” especially Africa, became an unofficial advisor and the closest thing he ever had to a ghostwriter. A guest at the family home in Libertyville, Illinois, known as the “farm,” she unfailingly arrived with a bottle of Dom Perignon for his infrequent visits to the place he loved best. In New York he overcompensated for that essentially lonely life with a social, “representational” life which went beyond the call of duty, and, I believe, shortened his life but added to his reservoir of friends, colleagues, and acquaintances, including many diplomats and world leaders.

The heart of the collection is the correspondence. Although it is sometimes perfunctory and formal on matters of official business, much of it is intimate and eloquent, a caring reflection of the times, the issues and their personalities, family responsibilities, and his devotion to people and their causes. His affection and support of family, especially three sons, is self-evident. He was, and appears, in this correspondence the most unaffected and generous of humans, never too busy or distracted for friends. The universality of his “constituency” is extraordinary, a hint of what the American statesman can be in an expectant world. His correspondence is not weighted with industrialists and financiers, but draws from the world of the arts (including admiring movie stars), journalism, law, theology, labor, social work, diplomacy and government, education, economics, philosophy, and philanthropy. From around the world this collection brings wise, good, and talented people to life, most allied by one means or another in common purpose with the Guv. Anyone seeking the obscene or even the unkind word will be disappointed. The comments from the Guv and his correspondents are bereft of self-interest or gratification, reflecting a different man – and time.

EDITORIAL NOTE

The Adlai E. Stevenson Papers are housed in the Seeley G. Mudd Manuscript Library at Princeton University. The microform edition of this collection comprises five parts. The relationship of the parts of the microform edition to the original arrangements of the collection at Princeton University is delineated below:

Microform Edition	Original Source at Princeton	Description of Contents
Part 1	Series 1	Correspondence, 1919–1965
Part 2	Series 1	Correspondence, 1919–1965
Part 3	Series 1	Correspondence, 1919–1965
Part 4	Series 1	Sampled Correspondence, 1952–1965

FORMAT

This guide lists materials in the order in which they appear on the reels.

NOTICE OF UNFILMED MATERIALS

Materials excluded from the series that have been published in this microfilm edition are noted in the entry for the file in which they are housed. These materials are available to researchers who use the collection on site at the Seeley G. Mudd Manuscript Library at Princeton University. Files excluded in their entirety are also listed in this collection guide. These files are available to researchers who use the collection on site at the Seeley G. Mudd Manuscript Library. Materials were excluded for one of two reasons:

Research Need

Certain materials were not microfilmed largely because of their relatively low priority with respect to research needs. Examples of such materials include several files entitled “Eccentrics,” which contain unsolicited nuisance letters.

Privacy

Some materials could not be microfilmed for reasons of confidentiality. In the interest of protecting the privacy of individuals, a concerted effort was made to exclude records that contained unsolicited resumes from job seekers and Social Security numbers.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The project would not have been possible without assistance from many individuals. Primary Source Microfilm wishes to thank Ben Primer, Associate University Librarian for Rare Books and Special Collections at Princeton University Library, for his commitment to making this collection widely available and his support of this project. We extend a debt of gratitude to Dan Linke, University Archivist and Curator of Public Policy Papers at the Seeley G. Mudd Manuscript Library at Princeton, for serving as project director at the Library, for his dedication to making the project run smoothly, his advice and counsel throughout the project, his unfailing good humor, responsiveness to myriad questions, and editorial skills. Special thanks go to former Senator Adlai E. Stevenson III for writing the introduction to this edition of his father's papers; his remarks provide insight and a personal perspective on his father's life, character, and career. At PSM, Bennett Lovett-Graff was instrumental in securing Princeton as a prospective publishing partner on this and other collections. Barbara Rader first recognized the value of this collection, pursued a contract for it, and served as PSM's editorial manager of the project. Thanks to PSM's manufacturing department for exemplary work: Barbara Phoenix, who served with dedication as manufacturing project manager; Tom Mahoney for masterfully filming this collection; and JoAnn Lebel for overseeing the smooth manufacturing operation. PSM's editorial aide, Kimberly White, meticulously reviewed all the files, prepared the materials, and helped to create the collection guide.

COLLECTION OVERVIEW

Adlai E. Stevenson (1900-1965), presidential candidate in 1952 and 1956, was the leading Democrat and a major figure in American politics and diplomacy during the Cold War years. As U.S. ambassador to the United Nations under Presidents John F. Kennedy and Lyndon Johnson, he negotiated the U.S. position through the Cuban Missile Crisis and Cold War relations with the Soviet Union. This collection is composed of three parts: his correspondence over his long career in public service; his papers on his involvement in the United Nations; and selected subject files illuminating other important aspects of his political career.

Stevenson's correspondence, organized alphabetically by person, is a valuable resource for documenting all aspects of his life and career. It provides rich documentation for his political activities during the 1950s and his involvement in international affairs in the 1950s and first half of the 1960s. It sheds light on policy-making in the Kennedy and Johnson administrations as well the many political and literary figures he counted as his friends and colleagues. Many leading figures of the Democratic Party are represented in the correspondence, including Eleanor Roosevelt, Harry S. Truman, the Kennedys, J. William Fulbright, Edmund G. Brown, and others. Their correspondence reveals Stevenson's role as the titular head of the Democratic Party for most of the 1950s, as well as his tireless support and interest in Democratic officeholders and candidates throughout the country. Stevenson's enormous popularity with people of all ages and socioeconomic backgrounds is evidenced in his responses to letters from the general public. He was quite candid in his correspondence and sometimes embarrassingly honest and self-effacing.

A key component of this collection is Stevenson's involvement in the UN. These materials document two diverse periods: his involvement in the organization of the United Nations immediately following World War II, and his service to the United Nations as United States ambassador from 1961 until his death in 1965. The UN papers are arranged alphabetically by folder title and provide the full record of Stevenson's involvement with the Cuban Missile Crisis, where, after the US discovered offensive nuclear weapons in Cuba, he confronted Soviet Ambassador Valerian Zorin in an emergency meeting of the Security Council, challenged him to admit that the offensive weapons had been placed in Cuba, and declared that he was prepared to wait "until Hell freezes over" for Zorin's answer. In addition to the Cuban Missile Crisis, Stevenson played a leadership role in UN disputes in Cyprus, Congo, Israel, and Vietnam. Previously classified documents, released in 1987 by the State Department, are fully integrated into his UN papers. Particularly significant are Stevenson's handwritten notes, taken during meetings with the Secretary General, President, and the Security Council.

Selections from the subject files include correspondence, reference materials, news clippings, meeting minutes, agendas, and other materials documenting other aspects of Stevenson's professional life, particularly his government service during the New Deal and World War II and his political activities outside his presidential campaign.

INTRODUCTION

The large Adlai Stevenson II archive at Princeton University's Mudd Library has been skillfully organized by its staff and selectively microfilmed by Primary Source Microfilm. This collaborative effort illuminates his public and private lives, as well as many issues and personalities of his time. This commendable effort preserves and makes the archive widely available while weeding out material of secondary interest which remains available at the Library to interested researchers. The only official papers of Adlai II's not housed at Princeton are documents from his years as Governor of Illinois (1949-1952); these were segregated and consigned by the Stevenson family to the Illinois Historical Library in Springfield where they, too, have been capably managed and are accessible along with other family archives, some of which reference Adlai II.

Early Career and Influences

A child of the American heartland and center of isolationism, the Guv, as he was known to close friends, was from the beginning a peripatetic student and citizen of the world. As a student, he lived through World War I and pondered the military cemeteries in Europe. As a boy correspondent for the family-owned newspaper, the Bloomington Daily Pantagraph, he covered the early post-civil war Soviet Union, where he observed starving "street children." As a student at Princeton, he was influenced by Woodrow Wilson's internationalism, which postulated self-determination for all peoples and a League of Nations to resolve disputes peacefully and end war for all time. Wilson in some measure accounts for the internationalism which runs through the life depicted in these documents. As a young lawyer in Chicago, capital of midwestern isolationism, Adlai II led the Chicago Council on Foreign Relations and the William Allen White Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies.

We lived in Washington during the early New Deal years, from whence records have descended in this archive, and later when Pearl Harbor was attacked and the Guv was an Assistant to Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox, a Chicago Republican. No doubt the latter experience, which included trips to the Pacific theatre and, near war's end, assignments in Europe, sharpened his distaste for war and his commitment to the rebirth of Wilson's internationalism and, in particular, the United Nations. The Guv served in the US delegation to the 1945 San Francisco conference which founded the UN. From then on, my memories supplement the documentary record, starting with his representation of the US on the Preparatory Commission of the UN in London later that year. We lived in a small house on a mews a stone's throw from Grosvenor Square where he would die twenty years later. Our little home in war-torn London became a nightly watering hole for great men excitedly laying the foundation for a new world order and the rebirth of Europe. Many years later, when I was a US Senator, I met with Andrei Gromyko, Foreign Minister of the Soviet Union, in his Kremlin lair. He recalled with uncharacteristic warmth those evenings in London. I recalled my mother attributing Gromyko's longevity to the vitamins she fed her guests. He saw no humor in the remark. Over many years and places around the world, the Guv collected and attracted a truly unique and vast assortment of friends, admirers, associates, and acquaintances. Through their correspondence, they come to life in this microfilm collection.

The political ethic and character of Adlai II which emerges from these documents owes much to the influence of another man. Politics is a hereditary risk in the Stevenson family. His grandfather, Adlai I, had been Vice-President in Grover Cleveland's second term, 1893 to 1897. His father, a dabbler in politics, was an Illinois Secretary of State. His inspiration was Lincoln, another product of the prairie, a constant presence in the family and revered above all others. Lincoln gave his sublime autobiography to great-great-grandfather Jesse Fell, founder of the Daily Pantagraph, who, having requested it from a reluctant Lincoln, used it to promote him for the Presidency. Fell also proposed the Lincoln-Douglas debates, which attracted national attention. Adlai II's eloquence and feeling, his use of anecdote and humor to make a point, are reminiscent of Lincoln – as is the ethic. "I must keep principle fixed within me," Lincoln said. The Guv did.

Governor and Presidential Candidate

Nineteen forty-eight was shaping up to be a bad year for the Democrats. The Illinois Regular Democratic Organization decided to stem the tide by heading its ticket with Adlai II for Governor and Professor Paul Douglas of the University of Chicago for Senator. Each had sought the other's nomination. But the party elders in their wisdom decided it was safer to trust the spoils in Springfield to the unknown quantity, Adlai II, than the known quantity, the Professor, a reform Chicago alderman, in case they were elected. Adlai II was elected Governor by the largest majority in Illinois history. Together he and Douglas carried Harry Truman to a narrow victory in Illinois and re-election to the Presidency.

As Governor, Adlai II was a reformer, but he won over the party elders led by Jacob (Jake) Arvey, Cook County Democratic chairman, who became an enthusiastic supporter thereafter. At the same time, he recruited an extraordinary cabinet and staff of prominent lawyers, academics, specialists in criminology, mental health and so on and began remaking state government. His efforts and success attracted national interest. Springfield became something of a Mecca for scholars, authors, politicians, journalists – people from everywhere curious about this anomalous character, a "striped pants" diplomat up to his eyeballs in politics and reforming a squalid state government. He was serving Illinois where the roots ran deep and the obligations were large and he rejoiced in the work, his hands on the levers of power. The characters in Illinois government reappear in the documents time and again over the years that followed. Some went with him from his administration into an irregular law practice during the Eisenhower interregnum and then into the Kennedy and Johnson administrations. The Guv remarked at his Senate confirmation hearing for Ambassador to the UN in 1961 that he regretted he had but one law firm to give to his country.

The roots and early years in Illinois are naturally not as fulsomely documented as the years beginning in 1952, his last as Governor and the year he was drafted by the Democratic Convention for President after an eloquent welcoming address to the Democratic National Convention in Chicago where he addressed the contenders, Vice-President Alben Barkley and Senator Richard Russell as "cousin." The Guv had entered no primaries and resisted all entreaties, including that of President Truman, who thought no better of him for it. He wanted to finish his work of reforming Illinois state government. Besides, he recognized that victory over a war hero would be difficult after twenty years of Democratic rule in Washington.

His campaign for the Presidency began at the Convention with no staff, no money, and no program, only a sturdy band of volunteers. After he secured the nomination, he and his staff went on to wage a campaign which in losing the election won the hearts and minds of people the world over and led to a second Presidential nomination in 1956 even though he had entered only three primaries. He stood for patriotism, which he called the "quiet steady dedication of a lifetime." Calling peace "a condition of human survival in the nuclear age," he supported the UN and international cooperation. He was committed to closing the gap between the "haves and the have nots," to arms control, including the nuclear test ban treaty, and to environmentalism, the "fragile space ship Earth with its vulnerable supplies of water, soil and air."

The documents in this collection highlight the difference between the politics of then and of now. In the Presidential campaigns of 1952 and 1956, the Guv would take half hour blocs of time on national television to deliver eloquent speeches on complex subjects to cheering partisans. To him, what won was more important than who won. Trust the people with the truth, he said, all the truth. The spontaneity and humor of a man who could trust his instincts and impulses comes through in these speeches.

Throughout his life the Guv attracted friends and admirers, the high and mighty, authors, political supporters, journalists, economists, officials, friends and the children of friends, with whom he corresponded regularly and intimately. From the earliest days and between campaigns, he was that peripatetic student of the world, rummaging in its markets and favelas to learn how people lived and in their ruins and monuments to discover their past. He once remarked that he wished he could find a mountain that his friend, Eleanor Roosevelt, had not climbed first. Everywhere he made friends and acquaintances (an appropriate number of enemies, too). After the 1952 election, he was received virtually everywhere in the world as something of a hero, an eloquent and good-natured embodiment of principles which made America secure, the leader of the "free world" and friend to the "third world."

Highlights of the Microfilm Collection

The notes, memos, and correspondence in this microfilm edition bring to life the events in which Adlai II played a role. They include the Bay of Pigs, Cuban Missile Crisis, admission of China to the UN, and Soviet arrears in the payment of UN dues. These documents go back to the 1930s, then forward to World War II, Korea, the founding of the UN and its early days, the Presidential campaigns, as well as his service at the UN. As titular leader of the Democratic Party, the Guv organized an Advisory Council which developed issues and policies for the Democratic Party often at odds with the Congressional leadership. The Advisory Council included familiar lawyer statesmen such as Thomas Finletter and George Ball, and economists John Kenneth Galbraith and Seymour Harris. The Guv headed a team which during John F. Kennedy's campaign for President quietly put together a report on foreign policy issues and options for the President-elect. In correspondence, reports, and notes such moments and endeavors come alive.

Not everything in Adlai II's life was political or official, however. From his early days at the Council on Foreign Relations and the Hull House Association in Chicago (the famous settlement house) he was active in companies, charities, and various civic organizations. His life was one of perpetual motion with little time for reading books and none wasted on spectator sports and entertainment, not after the 1930s when he had been known to ride the hounds. He was a director of the Pantagraph until I took over when he went to New York in 1961. In New York he became a director of the Field Foundation, the Eleanor Roosevelt Foundation, and the Encyclopedia Britannica (owned by his feisty friend, William Benton, a former Senator and State Department official). His travel as an author for Look magazine or lawyer for corporate clients, usually with one or more sons and a gaggle of friends in tow, emerges in more notes, articles, and correspondence.

This microfilm edition reflects this life and those of his admirers and friends. Among them are prominent women who befriended and supported an essentially lonely, single man. They include the redoubtable Agnes Meyer, her daughter Katherine (Kay) Graham, and her daughter Elizabeth (Lally) Weymouth – three generations. Mrs. Marshall (Ruth) Field was among his closest and most devoted friends, as were her daughters. Other close friends included Marietta Tree and her daughter, Frances Fitzgerald, renowned in her own right; and Jane Warner Dick from his earliest days in Illinois politics and, like Marietta, on the US delegation staff at the UN. All of these friends and colleagues come to life in this correspondence.

The correspondence is evocative. It cannot reveal all the underlying dynamics of the relationships. Barbara Ward, the brilliant, sprightly British economist and writer deeply committed to the “third world,” especially Africa, became an unofficial advisor and the closest thing he ever had to a ghostwriter. A guest at the family home in Libertyville, Illinois, known as the “farm,” she unfailingly arrived with a bottle of Dom Perignon for his infrequent visits to the place he loved best. In New York he overcompensated for that essentially lonely life with a social, “representational” life which went beyond the call of duty, and, I believe, shortened his life but added to his reservoir of friends, colleagues, and acquaintances, including many diplomats and world leaders.

The heart of the collection is the correspondence. Although it is sometimes perfunctory and formal on matters of official business, much of it is intimate and eloquent, a caring reflection of the times, the issues and their personalities, family responsibilities, and his devotion to people and their causes. His affection and support of family, especially three sons, is self-evident. He was, and appears, in this correspondence the most unaffected and generous of humans, never too busy or distracted for friends. The universality of his “constituency” is extraordinary, a hint of what the American statesman can be in an expectant world. His correspondence is not weighted with industrialists and financiers, but draws from the world of the arts (including admiring movie stars), journalism, law, theology, labor, social work, diplomacy and government, education, economics, philosophy, and philanthropy. From around the world this collection brings wise, good, and talented people to life, most allied by one means or another in common purpose with the Guv. Anyone seeking the obscene or even the unkind word will be disappointed. The comments from the Guv and his correspondents are bereft of self-interest or gratification, reflecting a different man – and time.

EDITORIAL NOTE

The Adlai E. Stevenson Papers are housed in the Seeley G. Mudd Manuscript Library at Princeton University. The microform edition of this collection comprises five parts. The relationship of the parts of the microform edition to the original arrangements of the collection at Princeton University is delineated below:

Microform Edition	Original Source at Princeton	Description of Contents
Part 1	Series 1	Correspondence, 1919–1965
Part 2	Series 1	Correspondence, 1919–1965
Part 3	Series 1	Correspondence, 1919–1965
Part 4	Series 1	Sampled Correspondence, 1952–1965
Part 5	Series 5 and 6	United Nations, 1945–1965 (Series 5) and Subject Files, 1931–1965 (Series 6)

FORMAT

This guide lists materials in the order in which they appear on the reels.

NOTICE OF UNFILMED MATERIALS

Materials excluded from the series that have been published in this microfilm edition are noted in the entry for the file in which they are housed. These materials are available to researchers who use the collection on site at the Seeley G. Mudd Manuscript Library at Princeton University. Files excluded in their entirety are also listed in this collection guide. These files are available to researchers who use the collection on site at the Seeley G. Mudd Manuscript Library. Materials were excluded for one of two reasons:

Research Need

Certain materials were not microfilmed largely because of their relatively low priority with respect to research needs. Examples of such materials include several files entitled “Eccentrics,” which contain unsolicited nuisance letters.

Privacy

Some materials could not be microfilmed for reasons of confidentiality. In the interest of protecting the privacy of individuals, a concerted effort was made to exclude records that contained unsolicited resumes from job seekers and Social Security numbers.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The project would not have been possible without assistance from many individuals. Primary Source Microfilm wishes to thank Ben Primer, Associate University Librarian for Rare Books and Special Collections at Princeton University Library, for his commitment to making this collection widely available and his support of this project. We extend a debt of gratitude to Dan Linke, University Archivist and Curator of Public Policy Papers at the Seeley G. Mudd Manuscript Library at Princeton, for serving as project director at the Library, for his dedication to making the project run smoothly, his advice and counsel throughout the project, his unfailing good humor, responsiveness to myriad questions, and editorial skills. Special thanks go to former Senator Adlai E. Stevenson III for writing the introduction to this edition of his father's papers; his remarks provide insight and a personal perspective on his father's life, character, and career. At PSM, Bennett Lovett-Graff was instrumental in securing Princeton as a prospective publishing partner on this and other collections. Barbara Rader first recognized the value of this collection, pursued a contract for it, and served as PSM's editorial manager of the project. Thanks to PSM's manufacturing department for exemplary work: Barbara Phoenix, who served with dedication as manufacturing project manager; Tom Mahoney for masterfully filming this collection; and JoAnn Lebel for overseeing the smooth manufacturing operation. PSM's editorial aide, Kimberly White, meticulously reviewed all the files, prepared the materials, and helped to create the collection guide.

COLLECTION OVERVIEW

Adlai E. Stevenson (1900–1965), presidential candidate in 1952 and 1956, was the leading Democrat and a major figure in American politics and diplomacy during the Cold War years. As U.S. ambassador to the United Nations under Presidents John F. Kennedy and Lyndon Johnson, he negotiated the U.S. position through the Cuban Missile Crisis and Cold War relations with the Soviet Union. This collection is composed of three parts: his correspondence over his long career in public service; his papers on his involvement in the United Nations; and selected subject files illuminating other important aspects of his political career.

Stevenson's correspondence, organized alphabetically by person, is a valuable resource for documenting all aspects of his life and career. It provides rich documentation for his political activities during the 1950s and his involvement in international affairs in the 1950s and first half of the 1960s. It sheds light on policy-making in the Kennedy and Johnson administrations as well the many political and literary figures he counted as his friends and colleagues. Many leading figures of the Democratic Party are represented in the correspondence, including Eleanor Roosevelt, Harry S. Truman, the Kennedys, J. William Fulbright, Edmund G. Brown, and others. Their correspondence reveals Stevenson's role as the titular head of the Democratic Party for most of the 1950s, as well as his tireless support and interest in Democratic officeholders and candidates throughout the country. Stevenson's enormous popularity with people of all ages and socioeconomic backgrounds is evidenced in his responses to letters from the general public, many of which can be found in the Sampled Correspondence. He was quite candid in his correspondence and sometimes embarrassingly honest and self-effacing.

A key component of this collection is Stevenson's involvement in the UN. These materials document two diverse periods: his involvement in the organization of the United Nations immediately following World War II, and his service to the United Nations as United States ambassador from 1961 until his death in 1965. The UN papers are arranged alphabetically by folder title and provide the full record of Stevenson's involvement with the Cuban Missile Crisis, where, after the US discovered offensive nuclear weapons in Cuba, he confronted Soviet Ambassador Valerian Zorin in an emergency meeting of the Security Council, challenged him to admit that the offensive weapons had been placed in Cuba, and declared that he was prepared to wait "until Hell freezes over" for Zorin's answer. In addition to the Cuban Missile Crisis, Stevenson played a leadership role in UN disputes in Cyprus, Congo, Israel, and Vietnam. Previously classified documents, released in 1987 by the State Department, are fully integrated into his UN papers. Particularly significant are Stevenson's handwritten notes, taken during meetings with the Secretary General, President, and the Security Council.

Selections from the subject files include correspondence, reference materials, news clippings, meeting minutes, agendas, and other materials documenting other aspects of Stevenson's professional life, particularly his government service during the New Deal and World War II and his political activities outside his presidential campaign.

INTRODUCTION

The large Adlai Stevenson II archive at Princeton University's Mudd Library has been skillfully organized by its staff and selectively microfilmed by Primary Source Microfilm. This collaborative effort illuminates his public and private lives, as well as many issues and personalities of his time. This commendable effort preserves and makes the archive widely available while weeding out material of secondary interest which remains available at the Library to interested researchers. The only official papers of Adlai II's not housed at Princeton are documents from his years as Governor of Illinois (1949–1952); these were segregated and consigned by the Stevenson family to the Illinois Historical Library in Springfield where they, too, have been capably managed and are accessible along with other family archives, some of which reference Adlai II.

Early Career and Influences

A child of the American heartland and center of isolationism, the Guv, as he was known to close friends, was from the beginning a peripatetic student and citizen of the world. As a student, he lived through World War I and pondered the military cemeteries in Europe. As a boy correspondent for the family-owned newspaper, the Bloomington Daily Pantagraph, he covered the early post-civil war Soviet Union, where he observed starving "street children." As a student at Princeton, he was influenced by Woodrow Wilson's internationalism, which postulated self-determination for all peoples and a League of Nations to resolve disputes peacefully and end war for all time. Wilson in some measure accounts for the internationalism which runs through the life depicted in these documents. As a young lawyer in Chicago, capital of midwestern isolationism, Adlai II led the Chicago Council on Foreign Relations and the William Allen White Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies.

We lived in Washington during the early New Deal years, from whence records have descended in this archive, and later when Pearl Harbor was attacked and the Guv was an Assistant to Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox, a Chicago Republican. No doubt the latter experience, which included trips to the Pacific theatre and, near war's end, assignments in Europe, sharpened his distaste for war and his commitment to the rebirth of Wilson's internationalism and, in particular, the United Nations. The Guv served in the US delegation to the 1945 San Francisco conference which founded the UN. From then on, my memories supplement the documentary record, starting with his representation of the US on the Preparatory Commission of the UN in London later that year. We lived in a small house on a mews a stone's throw from Grosvenor Square where he would die twenty years later. Our little home in war-torn London became a nightly watering hole for great men excitedly laying the foundation for a new world order and the rebirth of Europe. Many years later, when I was a US Senator, I met with Andrei Gromyko, Foreign Minister of the Soviet Union, in his Kremlin lair. He recalled with uncharacteristic warmth those evenings in London. I recalled my mother attributing Gromyko's longevity to the vitamins she fed her guests. He saw no humor in the remark. Over many years and places around the world, the Guv collected and attracted a truly unique and vast assortment of friends, admirers, associates, and acquaintances. Through their correspondence, they come to life in this microfilm collection.

The political ethic and character of Adlai II which emerges from these documents owes much to the influence of another man. Politics is a hereditary risk in the Stevenson family. His grandfather, Adlai I, had been Vice-President in Grover Cleveland's second term, 1893 to 1897. His father, a dabbler in politics, was an Illinois Secretary of State. His inspiration was Lincoln, another product of the prairie, a constant presence in the family and revered above all others. Lincoln gave his sublime autobiography to great-great-grandfather Jesse Fell, founder of the Daily Pantagraph, who, having requested it from a reluctant Lincoln, used it to promote him for the Presidency. Fell also proposed the Lincoln-Douglas debates, which attracted national attention. Adlai II's eloquence and feeling, his use of anecdote and humor to make a point, are reminiscent of Lincoln – as is the ethic. "I must keep principle fixed within me," Lincoln said. The Guv did.

Governor and Presidential Candidate

Nineteen forty-eight was shaping up to be a bad year for the Democrats. The Illinois Regular Democratic Organization decided to stem the tide by heading its ticket with Adlai II for Governor and Professor Paul Douglas of the University of Chicago for Senator. Each had sought the other's nomination. But the party elders in their wisdom decided it was safer to trust the spoils in Springfield to the unknown quantity, Adlai II, than the known quantity, the Professor, a reform Chicago alderman, in case they were elected. Adlai II was elected Governor by the largest majority in Illinois history. Together he and Douglas carried Harry Truman to a narrow victory in Illinois and re-election to the Presidency.

As Governor, Adlai II was a reformer, but he won over the party elders led by Jacob (Jake) Arvey, Cook County Democratic chairman, who became an enthusiastic supporter thereafter. At the same time, he recruited an extraordinary cabinet and staff of prominent lawyers, academics, specialists in criminology, mental health and so on and began remaking state government. His efforts and success attracted national interest. Springfield became something of a Mecca for scholars, authors, politicians, journalists – people from everywhere curious about this anomalous character, a "striped pants" diplomat up to his eyeballs in politics and reforming a squalid state government. He was serving Illinois where the roots ran deep and the obligations were large and he rejoiced in the work, his hands on the levers of power. The characters in Illinois government reappear in the documents time and again over the years that followed. Some went with him from his administration into an irregular law practice during the Eisenhower interregnum and then into the Kennedy and Johnson administrations. The Guv remarked at his Senate confirmation hearing for Ambassador to the UN in 1961 that he regretted he had but one law firm to give to his country.

The roots and early years in Illinois are naturally not as fulsomely documented as the years beginning in 1952, his last as Governor and the year he was drafted by the Democratic Convention for President after an eloquent welcoming address to the Democratic National Convention in Chicago where he addressed the contenders, Vice-President Alben Barkley and Senator Richard Russell as "cousin." The Guv had entered no primaries and resisted all entreaties, including that of President Truman, who thought no better of him for it. He wanted to finish his work of reforming Illinois state government. Besides, he recognized that victory over a war hero would be difficult after twenty years of Democratic rule in Washington.

His campaign for the Presidency began at the Convention with no staff, no money, and no program, only a sturdy band of volunteers. After he secured the nomination, he and his staff went on to wage a campaign which in losing the election won the hearts and minds of people the world over and led to a second Presidential nomination in 1956 even though he had entered only three primaries. He stood for patriotism, which he called the “quiet steady dedication of a lifetime.” Calling peace “a condition of human survival in the nuclear age,” he supported the UN and international cooperation. He was committed to closing the gap between the “haves and the have nots,” to arms control, including the nuclear test ban treaty, and to environmentalism, the “fragile space ship Earth with its vulnerable supplies of water, soil and air.”

The documents in this collection highlight the difference between the politics of then and of now. In the Presidential campaigns of 1952 and 1956, the Guv would take half hour blocs of time on national television to deliver eloquent speeches on complex subjects to cheering partisans. To him, what won was more important than who won. Trust the people with the truth, he said, all the truth. The spontaneity and humor of a man who could trust his instincts and impulses comes through in these speeches.

Throughout his life the Guv attracted friends and admirers, the high and mighty, authors, political supporters, journalists, economists, officials, friends and the children of friends, with whom he corresponded regularly and intimately. From the earliest days and between campaigns, he was that peripatetic student of the world, rummaging in its markets and favelas to learn how people lived and in their ruins and monuments to discover their past. He once remarked that he wished he could find a mountain that his friend, Eleanor Roosevelt, had not climbed first. Everywhere he made friends and acquaintances (an appropriate number of enemies, too). After the 1952 election, he was received virtually everywhere in the world as something of a hero, an eloquent and good-natured embodiment of principles which made America secure, the leader of the “free world” and friend to the “third world.”

Highlights of the Microfilm Collection

The notes, memos, and correspondence in this microfilm edition bring to life the events in which Adlai II played a role. They include the Bay of Pigs, Cuban Missile Crisis, admission of China to the UN, and Soviet arrears in the payment of UN dues. These documents go back to the 1930s, then forward to World War II, Korea, the founding of the UN and its early days, the Presidential campaigns, as well as his service at the UN. As titular leader of the Democratic Party, the Guv organized an Advisory Council which developed issues and policies for the Democratic Party often at odds with the Congressional leadership. The Advisory Council included familiar lawyer statesmen such as Thomas Finletter and George Ball, and economists John Kenneth Galbraith and Seymour Harris. The Guv headed a team which during John F. Kennedy’s campaign for President quietly put together a report on foreign policy issues and options for the President-elect. In correspondence, reports, and notes such moments and endeavors come alive.

Not everything in Adlai II’s life was political or official, however. From his early days at the Council on Foreign Relations and the Hull House Association in Chicago (the famous settlement house) he was active in companies, charities, and various civic organizations. His life was one of perpetual motion with little time for reading books and none wasted on spectator sports and entertainment, not after the 1930s when he had been known to ride the hounds. He was a director of the Pantagraph until I took over when he went to New York in 1961. In New York he became a director of the Field Foundation, the Eleanor Roosevelt Foundation, and the Encyclopedia Britannica (owned by his feisty friend, William Benton, a former Senator and State Department official). His travel as an author for Look magazine or lawyer for corporate clients, usually with one or more sons and a gaggle of friends in tow, emerges in more notes, articles, and correspondence.

This microfilm edition reflects this life and those of his admirers and friends. Among them are prominent women who befriended and supported an essentially lonely, single man. They include the redoubtable Agnes Meyer, her daughter Katherine (Kay) Graham, and her daughter Elizabeth (Lally) Weymouth – three generations. Mrs. Marshall (Ruth) Field was among his closest and most devoted friends, as were her daughters. Other close friends included Marietta Tree and her daughter, Frances Fitzgerald, renowned in her own right; and Jane Warner Dick from his earliest days in Illinois politics and, like Marietta, on the US delegation staff at the UN. All of these friends and colleagues come to life in this correspondence.

The correspondence is evocative. It cannot reveal all the underlying dynamics of the relationships. Barbara Ward, the brilliant, sprightly British economist and writer deeply committed to the “third world,” especially Africa, became an unofficial advisor and the closest thing he ever had to a ghostwriter. A guest at the family home in Libertyville, Illinois, known as the “farm,” she unfailingly arrived with a bottle of Dom Perignon for his infrequent visits to the place he loved best. In New York he overcompensated for that essentially lonely life with a social, “representational” life which went beyond the call of duty, and, I believe, shortened his life but added to his reservoir of friends, colleagues, and acquaintances, including many diplomats and world leaders.

The heart of the collection is the correspondence. Although it is sometimes perfunctory and formal on matters of official business, much of it is intimate and eloquent, a caring reflection of the times, the issues and their personalities, family responsibilities, and his devotion to people and their causes. His affection and support of family, especially three sons, is self-evident. He was, and appears, in this correspondence the most unaffected and generous of humans, never too busy or distracted for friends. The universality of his “constituency” is extraordinary, a hint of what the American statesman can be in an expectant world. His correspondence is not weighted with industrialists and financiers, but draws from the world of the arts (including admiring movie stars), journalism, law, theology, labor, social work, diplomacy and government, education, economics, philosophy, and philanthropy. From around the world this collection brings wise, good, and talented people to life, most allied by one means or another in common purpose with the Guv. Anyone seeking the obscene or even the unkind word will be disappointed. The comments from the Guv and his correspondents are bereft of self-interest or gratification, reflecting a different man – and time.

FORMAT

This guide lists materials in the order in which they appear on the reels.

NOTICE OF UNFILMED MATERIALS

Materials excluded from the series that have been published in this microfilm edition are noted in the entry for the file in which they are housed. These materials are available to researchers who use the collection on site at the Seeley G. Mudd Manuscript Library at Princeton University. Files excluded in their entirety are also listed in this collection guide. These files are available to researchers who use the collection on site at the Seeley G. Mudd Manuscript Library. Materials were excluded for one of two reasons:

Research Need

Certain materials were not microfilmed largely because of their relatively low priority with respect to research needs. Examples of such materials include several files entitled “Eccentrics,” which contain unsolicited nuisance letters.

Privacy

Some materials could not be microfilmed for reasons of confidentiality. In the interest of protecting the privacy of individuals, a concerted effort was made to exclude records that contained unsolicited resumes from job seekers and Social Security numbers.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The project would not have been possible without assistance from many individuals. Primary Source Microfilm wishes to thank Ben Primer, Associate University Librarian for Rare Books and Special Collections at Princeton University Library, for his commitment to making this collection widely available and his support of this project. We extend a debt of gratitude to Dan Linke, University Archivist and Curator of Public Policy Papers at the Seeley G. Mudd Manuscript Library at Princeton, for serving as project director at the Library, for his dedication to making the project run smoothly, his advice and counsel throughout the project, his unfailing good humor, responsiveness to myriad questions, and editorial skills. Special thanks go to former Senator Adlai E. Stevenson III for writing the introduction to this edition of his father's papers; his remarks provide insight and a personal perspective on his father's life, character, and career. At PSM, Bennett Lovett-Graff was instrumental in securing Princeton as a prospective publishing partner on this and other collections. Barbara Rader first recognized the value of this collection, pursued a contract for it, and served as PSM's editorial manager of the project. Thanks to PSM's manufacturing department for exemplary work: Barbara Phoenix, who served with dedication as manufacturing project manager; Tom Mahoney for masterfully filming this collection; and JoAnn Lebel for overseeing the smooth manufacturing operation. PSM's editorial aide, Kimberly White, meticulously reviewed all the files, prepared the materials, and helped to create the collection guide.

COLLECTION OVERVIEW

Adlai E. Stevenson (1900–1965), presidential candidate in 1952 and 1956, was the leading Democrat and a major figure in American politics and diplomacy during the Cold War years. As U.S. ambassador to the United Nations under Presidents John F. Kennedy and Lyndon Johnson, he negotiated the U.S. position through the Cuban Missile Crisis and Cold War relations with the Soviet Union. This collection is composed of three parts: his correspondence over his long career in public service; his papers on his involvement in the United Nations; and selected subject files illuminating other important aspects of his political career.

Stevenson's correspondence, organized alphabetically by person, is a valuable resource for documenting all aspects of his life and career. It provides rich documentation for his political activities during the 1950s and his involvement in international affairs in the 1950s and first half of the 1960s. It sheds light on policy-making in the Kennedy and Johnson administrations as well the many political and literary figures he counted as his friends and colleagues. Many leading figures of the Democratic Party are represented in the correspondence, including Eleanor Roosevelt, Harry S. Truman, the Kennedys, J. William Fulbright, Edmund G. Brown, and others. Their correspondence reveals Stevenson's role as the titular head of the Democratic Party for most of the 1950s, as well as his tireless support and interest in Democratic officeholders and candidates throughout the country. Stevenson's enormous popularity with people of all ages and socioeconomic backgrounds is evidenced in his responses to letters from the general public, many of which can be found in the Sampled Correspondence. He was quite candid in his correspondence and sometimes embarrassingly honest and self-effacing.

A key component of this collection is Stevenson's involvement in the UN. These materials document two diverse periods: his involvement in the organization of the United Nations immediately following World War II, and his service to the United Nations as United States ambassador from 1961 until his death in 1965. The UN papers are arranged alphabetically by folder title and provide the full record of Stevenson's involvement with the Cuban Missile Crisis, where, after the US discovered offensive nuclear weapons in Cuba, he confronted Soviet Ambassador Valerian Zorin in an emergency meeting of the Security Council, challenged him to admit that the offensive weapons had been placed in Cuba, and declared that he was prepared to wait "until Hell freezes over" for Zorin's answer. In addition to the Cuban Missile Crisis, Stevenson played a leadership role in UN disputes in Cyprus, Congo, Israel, and Vietnam. Previously classified documents, released in 1987 by the State Department, are fully integrated into his UN papers. Particularly significant are Stevenson's handwritten notes, taken during meetings with the Secretary General, President, and the Security Council.

Selections from the subject files include correspondence, reference materials, news clippings, meeting minutes, agendas, and other materials documenting other aspects of Stevenson's professional life, particularly his government service during the New Deal and World War II and his political activities outside his presidential campaign.

INTRODUCTION

The large Adlai Stevenson II archive at Princeton University's Mudd Library has been skillfully organized by its staff and selectively microfilmed by Primary Source Microfilm. This collaborative effort illuminates his public and private lives, as well as many issues and personalities of his time. This commendable effort preserves and makes the archive widely available while weeding out material of secondary interest which remains available at the Library to interested researchers. The only official papers of Adlai II's not housed at Princeton are documents from his years as Governor of Illinois (1949–1952); these were segregated and consigned by the Stevenson family to the Illinois Historical Library in Springfield where they, too, have been capably managed and are accessible along with other family archives, some of which reference Adlai II.

Early Career and Influences

A child of the American heartland and center of isolationism, the Guv, as he was known to close friends, was from the beginning a peripatetic student and citizen of the world. As a student, he lived through World War I and pondered the military cemeteries in Europe. As a boy correspondent for the family-owned newspaper, the Bloomington Daily Pantagraph, he covered the early post-civil war Soviet Union, where he observed starving "street children." As a student at Princeton, he was influenced by Woodrow Wilson's internationalism, which postulated self-determination for all peoples and a League of Nations to resolve disputes peacefully and end war for all time. Wilson in some measure accounts for the internationalism which runs through the life depicted in these documents. As a young lawyer in Chicago, capital of midwestern isolationism, Adlai II led the Chicago Council on Foreign Relations and the William Allen White Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies.

We lived in Washington during the early New Deal years, from whence records have descended in this archive, and later when Pearl Harbor was attacked and the Guv was an Assistant to Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox, a Chicago Republican. No doubt the latter experience, which included trips to the Pacific theatre and, near war's end, assignments in Europe, sharpened his distaste for war and his commitment to the rebirth of Wilson's internationalism and, in particular, the United Nations. The Guv served in the US delegation to the 1945 San Francisco conference which founded the UN. From then on, my memories supplement the documentary record, starting with his representation of the US on the Preparatory Commission of the UN in London later that year. We lived in a small house on a mews a stone's throw from Grosvenor Square where he would die twenty years later. Our little home in war-torn London became a nightly watering hole for great men excitedly laying the foundation for a new world order and the rebirth of Europe. Many years later, when I was a US Senator, I met with Andrei Gromyko, Foreign Minister of the Soviet Union, in his Kremlin lair. He recalled with uncharacteristic warmth those evenings in London. I recalled my mother attributing Gromyko's longevity to the vitamins she fed her guests. He saw no humor in the remark. Over many years and places around the world, the Guv collected and attracted a truly unique and vast assortment of friends, admirers, associates, and acquaintances. Through their correspondence, they come to life in this microfilm collection.

The political ethic and character of Adlai II which emerges from these documents owes much to the influence of another man. Politics is a hereditary risk in the Stevenson family. His grandfather, Adlai I, had been Vice-President in Grover Cleveland's second term, 1893 to 1897. His father, a dabbler in politics, was an Illinois Secretary of State. His inspiration was Lincoln, another product of the prairie, a constant presence in the family and revered above all others. Lincoln gave his sublime autobiography to great-great-grandfather Jesse Fell, founder of the Daily Pantagraph, who, having requested it from a reluctant Lincoln, used it to promote him for the Presidency. Fell also proposed the Lincoln-Douglas debates, which attracted national attention. Adlai II's eloquence and feeling, his use of anecdote and humor to make a point, are reminiscent of Lincoln – as is the ethic. "I must keep principle fixed within me," Lincoln said. The Guv did.

Governor and Presidential Candidate

Nineteen forty-eight was shaping up to be a bad year for the Democrats. The Illinois Regular Democratic Organization decided to stem the tide by heading its ticket with Adlai II for Governor and Professor Paul Douglas of the University of Chicago for Senator. Each had sought the other's nomination. But the party elders in their wisdom decided it was safer to trust the spoils in Springfield to the unknown quantity, Adlai II, than the known quantity, the Professor, a reform Chicago alderman, in case they were elected. Adlai II was elected Governor by the largest majority in Illinois history. Together he and Douglas carried Harry Truman to a narrow victory in Illinois and re-election to the Presidency.

As Governor, Adlai II was a reformer, but he won over the party elders led by Jacob (Jake) Arvey, Cook County Democratic chairman, who became an enthusiastic supporter thereafter. At the same time, he recruited an extraordinary cabinet and staff of prominent lawyers, academics, specialists in criminology, mental health and so on and began remaking state government. His efforts and success attracted national interest. Springfield became something of a Mecca for scholars, authors, politicians, journalists – people from everywhere curious about this anomalous character, a "striped pants" diplomat up to his eyeballs in politics and reforming a squalid state government. He was serving Illinois where the roots ran deep and the obligations were large and he rejoiced in the work, his hands on the levers of power. The characters in Illinois government reappear in the documents time and again over the years that followed. Some went with him from his administration into an irregular law practice during the Eisenhower interregnum and then into the Kennedy and Johnson administrations. The Guv remarked at his Senate confirmation hearing for Ambassador to the UN in 1961 that he regretted he had but one law firm to give to his country.

The roots and early years in Illinois are naturally not as fulsomely documented as the years beginning in 1952, his last as Governor and the year he was drafted by the Democratic Convention for President after an eloquent welcoming address to the Democratic National Convention in Chicago where he addressed the contenders, Vice-President Alben Barkley and Senator Richard Russell as "cousin." The Guv had entered no primaries and resisted all entreaties, including that of President Truman, who thought no better of him for it. He wanted to finish his work of reforming Illinois state government. Besides, he recognized that victory over a war hero would be difficult after twenty years of Democratic rule in Washington.

His campaign for the Presidency began at the Convention with no staff, no money, and no program, only a sturdy band of volunteers. After he secured the nomination, he and his staff went on to wage a campaign which in losing the election won the hearts and minds of people the world over and led to a second Presidential nomination in 1956 even though he had entered only three primaries. He stood for patriotism, which he called the "quiet steady dedication of a lifetime." Calling peace "a condition of human survival in the nuclear age," he supported the UN and international cooperation. He was committed to closing the gap between the "haves and the have nots," to arms control, including the nuclear test ban treaty, and to environmentalism, the "fragile space ship Earth with its vulnerable supplies of water, soil and air."

The documents in this collection highlight the difference between the politics of then and of now. In the Presidential campaigns of 1952 and 1956, the Guv would take half hour blocs of time on national television to deliver eloquent speeches on complex subjects to cheering partisans. To him, what won was more important than who won. Trust the people with the truth, he said, all the truth. The spontaneity and humor of a man who could trust his instincts and impulses comes through in these speeches.

Throughout his life the Guv attracted friends and admirers, the high and mighty, authors, political supporters, journalists, economists, officials, friends and the children of friends, with whom he corresponded regularly and intimately. From the earliest days and between campaigns, he was that peripatetic student of the world, rummaging in its markets and favelas to learn how people lived and in their ruins and monuments to discover their past. He once remarked that he wished he could find a mountain that his friend, Eleanor Roosevelt, had not climbed first. Everywhere he made friends and acquaintances (an appropriate number of enemies, too). After the 1952 election, he was received virtually everywhere in the world as something of a hero, an eloquent and good-natured embodiment of principles which made America secure, the leader of the "free world" and friend to the "third world."

Highlights of the Microfilm Collection

The notes, memos, and correspondence in this microfilm edition bring to life the events in which Adlai II played a role. They include the Bay of Pigs, Cuban Missile Crisis, admission of China to the UN, and Soviet arrears in the payment of UN dues. These documents go back to the 1930s, then forward to World War II, Korea, the founding of the UN and its early days, the Presidential campaigns, as well as his service at the UN. As titular leader of the Democratic Party, the Guv organized an Advisory Council which developed issues and policies for the Democratic Party often at odds with the Congressional leadership. The Advisory Council included familiar lawyer statesmen such as Thomas Finletter and George Ball, and economists John Kenneth Galbraith and Seymour Harris. The Guv headed a team which during John F. Kennedy's campaign for President quietly put together a report on foreign policy issues and options for the President-elect. In correspondence, reports, and notes such moments and endeavors come alive.

Not everything in Adlai II's life was political or official, however. From his early days at the Council on Foreign Relations and the Hull House Association in Chicago (the famous settlement house) he was active in companies, charities, and various civic organizations. His life was one of perpetual motion with little time for reading books and none wasted on spectator sports and entertainment, not after the 1930s when he had been known to ride the hounds. He was a director of the Pantagraph until I took over when he went to New York in 1961. In New York he became a director of the Field Foundation, the Eleanor Roosevelt Foundation, and the Encyclopedia Britannica (owned by his feisty friend, William Benton, a former Senator and State Department official). His travel as an author for Look magazine or lawyer for corporate clients, usually with one or more sons and a gaggle of friends in tow, emerges in more notes, articles, and correspondence.

This microfilm edition reflects this life and those of his admirers and friends. Among them are prominent women who befriended and supported an essentially lonely, single man. They include the redoubtable Agnes Meyer, her daughter Katherine (Kay) Graham, and her daughter Elizabeth (Lally) Weymouth – three generations. Mrs. Marshall (Ruth) Field was among his closest and most devoted friends, as were her daughters. Other close friends included Marietta Tree and her daughter, Frances Fitzgerald, renowned in her own right; and Jane Warner Dick from his earliest days in Illinois politics and, like Marietta, on the US delegation staff at the UN. All of these friends and colleagues come to life in this correspondence.

The correspondence is evocative. It cannot reveal all the underlying dynamics of the relationships. Barbara Ward, the brilliant, sprightly British economist and writer deeply committed to the “third world,” especially Africa, became an unofficial advisor and the closest thing he ever had to a ghostwriter. A guest at the family home in Libertyville, Illinois, known as the “farm,” she unfailingly arrived with a bottle of Dom Perignon for his infrequent visits to the place he loved best. In New York he overcompensated for that essentially lonely life with a social, “representational” life which went beyond the call of duty, and, I believe, shortened his life but added to his reservoir of friends, colleagues, and acquaintances, including many diplomats and world leaders.

The heart of the collection is the correspondence. Although it is sometimes perfunctory and formal on matters of official business, much of it is intimate and eloquent, a caring reflection of the times, the issues and their personalities, family responsibilities, and his devotion to people and their causes. His affection and support of family, especially three sons, is self-evident. He was, and appears, in this correspondence the most unaffected and generous of humans, never too busy or distracted for friends. The universality of his “constituency” is extraordinary, a hint of what the American statesman can be in an expectant world. His correspondence is not weighted with industrialists and financiers, but draws from the world of the arts (including admiring movie stars), journalism, law, theology, labor, social work, diplomacy and government, education, economics, philosophy, and philanthropy. From around the world this collection brings wise, good, and talented people to life, most allied by one means or another in common purpose with the Guv. Anyone seeking the obscene or even the unkind word will be disappointed. The comments from the Guv and his correspondents are bereft of self-interest or gratification, reflecting a different man – and time.

FORMAT

This guide lists materials in the order in which they appear on the reels.

NOTICE OF UNFILMED MATERIALS

Materials excluded from the series that have been published in this microfilm edition are noted in the entry for the file in which they are housed. These materials are available to researchers who use the collection on site at the Seeley G. Mudd Manuscript Library at Princeton University. Files excluded in their entirety are also listed in this collection guide. These files are available to researchers who use the collection on site at the Seeley G. Mudd Manuscript Library. Materials were excluded for one of two reasons:

Research Need

Certain materials were not microfilmed largely because of their relatively low priority with respect to research needs. Examples of such materials include several files entitled “Eccentrics,” which contain unsolicited nuisance letters.

Privacy

Some materials could not be microfilmed for reasons of confidentiality. In the interest of protecting the privacy of individuals, a concerted effort was made to exclude records that contained unsolicited resumes from job seekers and Social Security numbers.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The project would not have been possible without assistance from many individuals. Primary Source Microfilm wishes to thank Ben Primer, Associate University Librarian for Rare Books and Special Collections at Princeton University Library, for his commitment to making this collection widely available and his support of this project. We extend a debt of gratitude to Dan Linke, University Archivist and Curator of Public Policy Papers at the Seeley G. Mudd Manuscript Library at Princeton, for serving as project director at the Library, for his dedication to making the project run smoothly, his advice and counsel throughout the project, his unfailing good humor, responsiveness to myriad questions, and editorial skills. Special thanks go to former Senator Adlai E. Stevenson III for writing the introduction to this edition of his father's papers; his remarks provide insight and a personal perspective on his father's life, character, and career. At PSM, Bennett Lovett-Graff was instrumental in securing Princeton as a prospective publishing partner on this and other collections. Barbara Rader first recognized the value of this collection, pursued a contract for it, and served as PSM's editorial manager of the project. Thanks to PSM's manufacturing department for exemplary work: Barbara Phoenix, who served with dedication as manufacturing project manager; Tom Mahoney for masterfully filming this collection; and JoAnn Lebel for overseeing the smooth manufacturing operation. PSM's editorial aide, Kimberly White, meticulously reviewed all the files, prepared the materials, and helped to create the collection guide.
