COLLECTION OVERVIEW

America is experiencing a religious revival and a huge growth in the exploration and practice of alternative religions. The American Religions Collection, one of the largest collections of materials on alternative religious movements and practices in the world, offers thousands of hard-to-find serials relating to twentieth-century nontraditional religions and splinter groups of larger religious bodies in North America. The collection was built by J. Gordon Melton, the foremost scholar of nontraditional American religions in America, who donated it to the University of California, Santa Barbara, where it is housed at the Donald C. Davidson Library.

Eastern Religions: Buddhism, Shintoism, and Japanese New Religions is drawn from the American Religions Collection. Eastern Religions: Buddhism, Shintoism, and Japanese New Religions features 134 rare serials on Buddhism (Mahayana, Theravada, Tibetan, and Zen), Shintoism, and Japanese New Religions in the United States and from those countries that have influenced the American Buddhism movement. The total number of issues in the microfilm collection is 2836. Publication dates range from the 1930s through 2006, with the bulk of the titles published in the last forty years. It is important to note that Buddhist materials in this product have been significantly supplemented by the Anthony Leitner Memorial Collection, a specific collection within the American Religions Collection.

The serials in this collection provide much needed primary source material for divinity schools, departments of religion, American studies, Asian studies, ethnic studies, anthropology, sociology, and psychology.

INTRODUCTION TO THE COLLECTION

The American Religions Collection

The American Religions Collection (ARC) at the Davidson Library of the University of California—Santa Barbara currently houses the largest existing collection of primary and secondary materials on America's many new and alternative religious and spiritual groups, churches, temples, and associations. Significant among the new religious currents now becoming prominent, and well represented in ARC, are the American branches of the older religious traditions from Asia and the Middle East—Buddhism, Hinduism, and Islam as well as the smaller traditions such as Jainism, Sikhism, Shintoism, Taoism, and Zoroastrianism. Assembled by the Institute for the Study of American Religion (ISAR), an independent religious studies research facility founded in Evanston, Illinois in 1968, this collection has served as the backup documentation for the various editions of the *Encyclopedia of American Religions*ⁱ and a number of other reference works produced by ISAR. Through the 1970s and early 1980s, as hundreds of new religions made their presence known in America, ISAR made a systematic effort to gather the spectrum of materials they were generating—books, posters, flyers, and periodicals.

In 1985, ISAR moved to Santa Barbara, California, at which time it donated the collection to the Special Collections Department of the university's library. ISAR subsequently assumed the secondary roles of patron of the collection and advisor to the library on its future development. The collection has grown; over the intervening twenty years, ISAR has continued to regularly donate new materials and has worked with the library on the acquisition of several private collections that have more than doubled the size of the original donation.

The American Religions Collection contains materials representative of the spectrum of religious bodies currently active in North America but took as its special agenda the assembling of materials from what Elmer T. Clark had termed the "small sects of America" in his 1937 book of the same titleⁱⁱ--that is, those groups that because of their size, limited budgets, fragile organization, or developmental priorities were least likely to save and preserve their own archives. A leading concern that emerged at the time ISAR was founded was the collecting of the materials from the new generation of Eastern religions, especially Hinduism and Buddhism, the latter being the subject of this microfilm collection.

Background—Immigrant Religious Groups

The United States was founded largely by the children of men and women who had immigrated to North America in the seventeenth and eighteenth century from the British Isles, with a significant minority coming from other European countries, especially Sweden, Holland, and Germany. Through the nineteenth century, as the nation spread across the continent, immigrants from across Europe settled the land, resulting in the displacement and disenfranchisement of Native Americans, who were relegated to the margins of American cultural and political life.

Then, in the middle of the nineteenth century, Asians also began to immigrate to the United States, beginning with people from China's Pacific coast, who arrived in the wake of the discovery of gold in California. As news of the gold strike spread through the Christian missionary outposts ranging between Shanghai and Canton, many Chinese people decided to seek their fortune across the ocean. While many of the new immigrants were Christians, others were Buddhists, Taoists, and followers of traditional Chinese religion.

The Chinese presence along the West Coast grew steadily through the 1870s, spurred by the Burlingame Treaty of 1868, which allowed unlimited immigration and which was signed at a time when the United States sought further openings in Chinese markets. However, a growing Chinese presence in the American West created steadily increasing opposition from settlers of European heritage. Government officials responded by negotiating a new treaty in 1880, which emphasized the right of the United States to regulate immigration. Two years later, the Chinese Exclusion Act was passed; it not only halted immigration, it encouraged those who had already immigrated to return home. By this time, some 100,000 Chinese residents could be found in California, Oregon, and Washington.

The passing of the Chinese Exclusion Act ended the first phase of the Buddhist presence in the United States even as the second phase had already begun with the arrival of the first Japanese laborers in Hawaii in 1868. Through the next decades, their numbers steadily grew. In America, organized Buddhism did not begin until 1889, when Soryu Kagahi, a priest of the Honpa Hongwanji sect, opened the first center in Honolulu. Over the next decade, he was joined by colleagues from the Shingon, Nichiren, Jodo-shu, and Soto Zen sects. Though immigration slowed in 1907 due to the restrictions imposed by the Gentleman's Agreement, the Japanese community continued to grow through the years of World War I and eventually came to form approximately one-third of the island's population. By the 1920s, Buddhism had become a key element in Hawaii's religious establishment.

The Honpa Hongwanji also brought Buddhism to the continental United States. In 1898, two priests in San Francisco embarked on missionary work that would eventually result in the formation of the Buddhist Churches of America, the largest Buddhist group in the United States throughout most of the twentieth century. As the Japanese presence grew, other groups already in Hawaii also made the jump to the West Coast.

As the first generation of the Japanese American Buddhist community was establishing itself, Buddhist history was reshaped by a singular event--the World Parliament of Religions held in Chicago in the summer of 1893. The World Parliament brought together representatives of all the major world religions to dialogue with Christian and Jewish leaders. Among the Buddhist representatives was Soyen Shaku (1859-1919), a teacher of Zen Buddhism. His presence in Chicago marked not only America's introduction to Zen, but the opening of Buddhism to a Western audience. Shaku had been the student of Imakita Kosen, a Japanese leader known for giving serious consideration to Western culture and thought. It would be Kosen's students who would establish Zen in America in the first decade of the twentieth century.

A number of Anglo Americans had become fascinated with Japanese culture and Buddhism in the nineteenth century and several took steps to formally adopt the faith. Among these was Paul Carus, later the publisher of Open Court Press, who discovered Buddhism at the World Parliament and later brought D. T. Suzuki to the United States to facilitate the translation and publication of a spectrum of Buddhist texts. Many Americans discovered Buddhism through Suzuki's books.

What seemed to be a bright future for this second phase of Buddhist emergence in America was, like the first phase, cut short by a series of treaties negotiated in response to opposition to the growth of the Asian American community. Most notably, in the Gentleman's Agreement of 1907, Japan agreed to slow emigration by limiting the issuance of passports and the United States agreed not to specify Japan in further immigration laws. The agreement was then superseded by the Asian Exclusion Act of 1924, which blocked immigration from all Asian countries and in that regard, broke the Gentleman's Agreement. The new law brought to a close the second phase of Buddhist expansion in America. After 1924, immigration from Japan and other Buddhist countries was very much the exception.

Throughout the 1930s, the Buddhist presence in the United States was largely limited to a few Chinese temples located in urban Chinatowns and various Japanese groups whose centers were primarily in Hawaii and along the West Coast. The Japanese community would be totally disrupted by the paranoia that would follow the bombing of Pearl Harbor, leading to the displacement of many Japanese Americans to internment campsone of the darker chapters in American history. By this time, a few Shinto temples had also emerged in Hawaii. During the war, all the temples were closed; only one survived to be reopened afterwards.

The Asian Exclusion Act blunted Buddhist growth for more than four decades, though some internal growth did occur among those groups that had been established prior to 1924. After World War II, however, a new opportunity arose. Many Western military personnel stationed in Asia encountered Buddhism during their tour of duty; for example, a number of American soldiers discovered Zen during the period of occupation in the late 1940s. This interest would lead to a noticeable fascination with Zen on the part of intellectuals and members of the counter-culture in the 1950s, though the actual number of Buddhist converts at this time was quite small.

The third phase of Buddhist life in America did not emerge until 1965, when the United States rescinded the Asian Exclusion Act and placed Asian countries on the same immigration quota system as the nations of Western Europe. This change was the result of the Kennedy administration's attempts to gain support for early U.S. actions in Vietnam from Asian allies who felt insulted by the Exclusion Act. The new law was passed very early on during the Johnson administration. Once the new law was in place, immigration quotas from predominantly Buddhist countries ranging from Korea to Sri Lanka were filled annually. As provisions were made for refugees from the Vietnam War to enter the United States, immigration quotas shot upward. In the early 1990s, quotas were again raised by one third.

The new immigration law completely remade the American Buddhist community. Prior to 1965, American Buddhism was dominated by the Japanese. However, throughout the 1970s and 1980s, large communities of Chinese (Taiwan and Hong Kong), Vietnamese, and Korean Buddhists emerged, as did smaller communities representative of Myanmar, Thailand, Laos, Cambodia, Malaysia, and Sri Lanka. At the same time, Japanese Zen groups in America expanded rapidly.

A special concern developed in America for the many Tibetan Buddhists who fled their homeland following the Chinese takeover of Tibet in 1959. Assistance was offered to Tibetan Buddhist leaders wishing to come to the United States. Although adherents of America's alternative religions had long been fascinated by this mysterious country, Tibet and its traditional faith now emerged as being of serious interest to American academics. What began as an attempt to help preserve Tibetan heritage from China's anti-religious policies eventually resulted in a new generation of religious scholars adopting Tibetan Buddhism.

This third phase of American Buddhism was largely divided along ethnic lines, thus groups are generally categorized by country of origin and language. An ecumenical Buddhist movement has emerged to counter these ethnic divisions; its primary success was the formation of the American Buddhist Congress. Several movements, such as Engaged Buddhism, which seeks to create a socially relevant Buddhism, have also attempted to unite across ethnic and sectarian lines.

Background—Buddhism

Buddhism originated in India as a reformist movement within Hinduism. It offered a path to Buddhahood (enlightenment) initially articulated by its founder, Siddhartha Gautama, in what was then the Kingdom of Sakya (hence the references to him as Sakyamuni). After attaining enlightenment, Gautama the Buddha (Enlightened One) gathered followers, taught them, and then left it to them to provide leadership for the movement that had grown up around him. Buddhism became centered upon the goal of enlightenment, dharma (the path taught by the Buddha), and the sangha (the monastic community Buddha called into existence).

Buddhism spread southward to Sri Lanka and eastward to Myanmar (Burma), Thailand (Siam), Cambodia, Laos, and Vietnam. Here a distinct form of Buddhism, known as Theravada Buddhism, arose; it retained a base in the sangha.

Theravada Buddhism became the established religion in Sri Lanka, Myanmar, Thailand, Cambodia, and Laos. Although followers from each country relied on the same sacred texts written in Pali, differences arose based primarily on locality and the dominant language of the land. In the nineteenth century, some dissenting movements appeared, the most important being the several pietist traditions built around vipassana (insight) meditation, which is most firmly established in Thailand and Myanmar. Cambodian Buddhism was dealt a severe blow in the 1970s by the genocidal activity of the Kymer Rouge regime, during which almost all of the Buddhist monks were killed and most Buddhist temples were destroyed. Cambodian Buddhism has still not entirely recovered from this tragedy.

Buddhism also spread north into Afghanistan, China, Korea, and Japan, where a second form of Buddhism emerged. Generally known as Mahayana, it is characterized by its emphasis on the activity of bodhisattvas, enlightened beings who have dedicated their lives to assisting others in reaching Nirvana, the heavenly state that is the goal of Buddhist attainment. In Mahayana Buddhism, the term sangha tends to be used to refer to the entire community of believers, including monks, nuns, priests, and lay people.

Amid the different forms of Mahayana Buddhism that emerged in China, the worship of one bodhisattva, Amitabha (or Amida) Buddha, gained special providence. In what became known as Pure Land Buddhism, practice was centered upon the repetition of a name of Amitabha in the belief that having faith in him and simply calling upon his name would result in joining him after death in the Western Paradise known as the Pure Land. This form became the largest segment of Buddhism in medieval China, Korea, and Japan.

Japanese Buddhism has been especially influential in the development of American Buddhism. Although these forms of Buddhism no longer make up an absolute majority of the American Buddhist community, they continue to be its single largest segment. Japan has also been the main source of Buddhism as adopted by Anglo Americans. Several sects that followed Pure Land beliefs and practices, such as the Jodo-shu and the two sects of the Jodo Shin-shu--the Honpa Hongwanji and the Higashi Hongwanji-constituted the largest Buddhist community in medieval Japan. These three groups established themselves in the United States early in the twentieth century.

The emergence of new forms of Buddhism in Japan after World War II (a prominent element of the so-called Japanese new religions) added to Japan's influence on American Buddhism. Several new Nichiren Buddhist groups arose, the most notable being the Soka Gakkai, an enthusiastic evangelical form of Buddhism that has become the largest single Buddhist group in the United States and in many Western countries. Because of its high-pressure recruitment tactics, its rapid growth, and its involvement in politics, the Soka Gakkai was Japan's most controversial group, though by the end of the century, it had been accepted as part of the religious and political establishment.

Within the Mahayana tradition, two distinctive additional traditions became prominent. First, Mahayana Buddhism was transmitted to Tibet, where it merged with the native Bon religions and developed a variant form characterized by secret meditative and devotional-even magical--practices and by the leadership of priests believed to be reincarnations of aspects of Buddhas and bodhisattvas (known as lamas or tulkus). Tibetan Buddhism came to center on large monastic complexes that dotted the mountainous landscape and its lamas came to possess both political and ecclesiastical powers. Often referred to as Vajrayana (the Diamond Way), this form of Buddhism also had a long history in China; it flourished in the time of Kubla Khan and became the established religion in Mongolia. Early on, it traveled to Japan, where Shingon Buddhism emerged as the uniquely Japanese form of Vajrayana Buddhism.

Contemporaneously with the rise of Vajrayana, Ch'an Buddhism came to prominence in China. A form of Buddhism that emphasizes sitting in meditation each day, its origin is popularly attributed to Bodhidharma, a sixth-century teacher and Ch'an Buddhism's first patriarch. Ch'an Buddhism subsequently spread to Korea, where it is known as Son Buddhism, and to Japan, where it is known as Zen. Ch'an joined Pure Land Buddhism as one of the two most popular forms of Buddhism and was transmitted to Chinese communities located outside their homeland. It has had a remarkable revival in post-World War II Taiwan. Japanese Zen became the initial form of Buddhism that attracted a significant number of Anglo American followers.

Buddhism was carried to the United States by immigrant Asian believers who initially attempted to recreate the religious life they had known in their homeland. Ever since the different communities have become Americanized (primarily signaled by their adoption of English), tension has existed between those who prefer traditional ways and those who want to adapt Buddhism to their present cultural situation. The latter trend is further supported by the desire to spread the faith within the host culture and the emergence of a strong Anglo Buddhist community.

Documenting American Buddhism

The Buddhist materials of the American Religions Collection at the University of California—Santa Barbara primarily document the third phase of American Buddhist life, which began with the change of the immigration law in 1965, though an attempt has been made to gather the materials relative to the counter-culture interest in Zen in the 1950s. In the case of Buddhism, the collection of materials donated to the library by ISAR has been significantly supplemented by the Anthony Leitner Memorial Collection; its materials were produced primarily by California Buddhist groups through the 1970s and 1980s and were received by the library in 1997. This collection is doubly important because since 1965, the majority of Buddhist immigrants to the United States have entered the country through one of the three major California port cities--San Francisco, Los Angeles, and San Diego. As a result, forty percent of the nation's Buddhists now reside in the five counties that make up the greater Los Angeles metropolitan area.

Nontraditional American Religions: Eastern Religions: Buddhism, Shintoism, and Japanese New Religions features many Buddhist periodicals that document the emergence of the community in the four decades from 1965 to 2005. During this time, the community grew from approximately 200,000 followers (overwhelmingly of Japanese heritage) to between a million and a million and a half adherents, representative of all the Buddhist traditions currently found in Asia.

This collection of English-language periodicals, drawn from across the spectrum of American Buddhism, is all the more important because many American Buddhist groups continue to operate primarily in the language of their homeland. Only now, as a second generation born and raised in the West emerges, are these groups beginning to produce regular materials in English or in other Western languages. These periodicals form a representative selection of the English-language materials produced by the Buddhist community since 1965. They have been organized to highlight the major segments of the American Buddhist community (Mahayana, Theravada, Vajrayana/Tibetan, and Zen) and the various ethnic traditions that represent them.

Mahayana Buddhism

Japanese Buddhist Groups

The Buddhist Churches of America is the oldest Buddhist group in the United States and it remains one of the largest. It is represented in the collection by its 1965-1966 Annual Report, which offers a snapshot of the group as the third phase of American Buddhist life began. The collection also includes a run of the group's The American Buddhist and of the Wheel of Dharma.

While publications of several of the smaller Japanese Buddhist groups are included in the collection, the primary group represented is the Soka Gakkai, now officially the Soka Gakkai International. As the movement has grown and developed, it has issued a variety of periodicals, including Dharma World, Living Buddhism, Seikyo Times, and the World Tribune.

Chinese Buddhist Groups

The second largest segment of Mahayana Buddhism in America represents various Chinese Buddhist groups, many of which continue to publish most of their material in Chinese even as they keep close ties with their international headquarters in Taiwan or Hong Kong. The largest of these groups is Foguanshan, also known as the Buddha's Light International Association, which has built a large monastic and educational complex in Hacienda Heights, California. It is represented by its periodicals Buddha's Light Newsletter and Buddha's Light Newsletter of Los Angeles. The Sino-American Buddhist Association (also known as the Dharma Realm Buddhist Association) was among the first of the Chinese groups to reach out to the English-speaking populations. This collection includes a run of its early periodical, the Vaira Bodhi Sea (1970-1988).

Theravada Buddhism

Traditional Theravada Buddhism is represented here by the Washington Buddhist, published by the oldest Theravada Buddhist center in America, and the long run of the Monthly Guide, published by the International Buddhist Meditation Society, which is the oldest Vietnamese Buddhist center in America. The dearth of English-language material representative of traditional Theravada groups is due to the continued use of native languages in most of the centers serving Asian American Buddhists.

The predominant Anglo American response to Theravada Buddhism has been a move toward the new meditation practices that emerged in Thailand at the beginning of the twentieth century rather than toward the more traditional forms. In this movement, formed in part as a reaction to urbanized monks' worldliness, monks retreated into the forest to make concentrated efforts to reach enlightenment through vipassana (insight) meditation. In this regard, the Thai monk Ajaan Chah was most influential in making this tradition available in the West; he allowed Western seekers access to the centers associated with him. In the last half of the twentieth century, prominent vipassana centers also emerged in Myanmar and India.

The Insight Meditation Society is among the oldest and most influential of the vipassana groups in the United States. It is represented in this collection with a variety of newsletters: IMS, Insight, the Insight Meditation Society Newsletter, Here and Now, and the Spirit Rock Meditation Center Newsletter.

Tibetan Buddhism

The majority of those who fled Tibet relocated across the border in Nepal and India, thus there are few Tibetans in the United States. However, the Office of Tibet, a branch of the Tibetan government in exile, is located in New York City. By the 1960s, a few Tibetan priests found their way to the United States and opened the first centers. Beginning in the 1970s, the top leaders of several Tibetan Buddhist schools began to travel the world introducing Tibetan Buddhism to non-Tibetan audiences and welcoming them into the faith. Today, writings by the Dalai Lama can be found in most American book stores.

As a result of this outreach, numerous Tibetan Buddhist centers--primarily of the Gelug and Karma Kagyu traditions--emerged across the United States. The Gelug school is the branch led directly by the Dalai Lama. The Kagyu Karma tradition was spread by several popular teachers, including Chogyam Trungpa Rinpoche and Kalu Rinpoche.

The largest of the Gelug groups is the Foundation for the Preservation of the Mahayana Tradition, which may be researched through Mandala, its magazine, and the Mandala Newsletter. Other Gelug publications document the more secular aspects of the Dalai Lama's responsibilities, including Tibet Brief, the Tibet House Drum, and the USTC Newsletter.

The largest single Tibetan group in America, now known as Vajradhatu International, was founded by the late Chogyam Trungpa, who dates his arrival in the United States to the 1970s. The group's history can be traced in the Vajradhatu Sun, the Naropa Magazine, and the Journal of Contemplative Psychotherapy. A variety of Kagyu periodicals from other groups can also be found in this collection, including Densal, Drang Den, Empty Mirror, the Heart Center KTC Newsletter, Namo Buddha News, and Song of Fulfillment.

The Nyingma School was among the earliest of the Tibetan traditions to establish itself in the United States and the original Tibetan Nyingmapa Meditation Center in Berkeley, California, continues to thrive. Among the many products of its publication house, Dharma Publishing, was a substantive journal, Crystal Mirror. Other Nyingma periodicals found in this collection are the Naagyur Nyingma and Shrab Rigpay Jungnay, the Yeshe Nyingpo West Coast Newsletter.

Zen Buddhism

The Zen community, though not the largest Buddhist community in America, has been its most intellectual and has produced a wealth of written material. This is counterintuitive, as Zen is possibly the most anti-intellectual of practices, centering on experience rather than on learning and the exposition of the traditional Buddhist sacred writings.

Included in this collection is a host of newsletters and journals produced by some of the more successful Zen organizations. Not to be missed are the several issues of Zen published by American Buddhist pioneer Dwight Goddard, who in the 1930s unsuccessfully tried to found a Zen monastic movement focused in two centers, one in Vermont and one in Santa Barbara, California. Wind Bell, another relatively early Zen journal, published historically significant articles on the development of the American Buddhist community.

The majority of the Zen periodicals in this collection come from the older and more substantial Zen groups such as the Zen Center of Rochester (Zen Bow), the Zen Center of Los Angeles (ZCLA Newsletter), the Diamond Sangha (Blind Donkey), and the First Zen Institute of America (Zen Notes). Of particular interest in this collection are the issues of Kahawai, an early effort to give voice to women's issues in the Zen community.

The Korean Son tradition is represented by Primary Point, the Newsletter of the Providence Zen Center, and Spring Wind, the latter published by the Zen Lotus Society (now the Buddhist Society for Compassionate Wisdom).

Shintoism and Japanese New Religions

Japanese Buddhism developed in competition with Shintoism, the traditional religion of ancient Japan; both faiths contributed to a variety of syncretistic religions that emerged after World War II. The more successful new religions were able to spread to the United States. A few, such as the Church of World Messianity, Mahikari, and the Kushi Institute, have been able to find a response beyond the Japanese American community. Others, such as Konkokyo and Tenrikyo, largely remain insular, though they have been serving an increasingly English-speaking membership.

This part of the collection is anchored by such periodicals as the Voice from Heaven, the English-language periodical of the very successful Tensho-Kotai Jingu-Kyo, the various publications of Mahikari (Mahikari, Mahikari Magazine, True Light) and the English magazine of Tenrikyo (Tenrikyo Newsletter).

Conclusion

The American Religions Collection has emerged as a treasure trove of primary materials representative of a segment of the religious community, which is increasingly being recognized as an important part of American culture yet which remains relatively ignored by academia. As such, Nontraditional American Religions: Eastern Religions: Buddhism, Shintoism, and Japanese New Religions will be of immense importance to a broad spectrum of scholars and researchers in the social and psychological sciences as well as the humanities—historians attempting to fill out the story of the United States, those in religious studies attempting to understand change and innovation in religion, and social critics trying to comprehend the role of religion in such processes as globalization, secularization, and ethnic assertiveness.

EDITORIAL NOTE

Organization and Format

The American Religions Collection, much of which was assembled by J. Gordon Melton, Director of the Institute for the Study of American Religion, primarily documents non-mainstream religions in America. The collection contains monographs, manuscript collections, and serials. Dr. Melton's Encyclopedia of American Religions (7th ed., Gale Research, 2003) provides descriptive references to the various religious groups and, to a considerable extent, the collection is organized along the lines of the Encyclopedia. One of the twenty-four religious groupings in the Encyclopedia is the Eastern Family (Part II), including Buddhism, Shintoism, and Japanese New Religions: Eastern Religions: Buddhism, Shintoism, and Japanese New Religions is organized into five parts: Part 1, Mahayana Buddhism, Part 2, Theravada Buddhism, Part 3, Tibetan Buddhism, Part 4, Zen Buddhism, and Part 5, Shintoism and Japanese New Religions.

How to Use This Guide

Serials in each part of this collection have been microfilmed alphabetically by publication title and are listed in the Reel Guide for that part in alphabetical order as they appear on the reels. To find a particular title, use the Reel Index on p. xviii. The Reel Index indicates the range of serials on each reel. For instance, if you are looking for the Mahayana Buddhist serial Buddha's Light Newsletter, in Part 1, Mahayana Buddhism, it will be on Reel 1, which contains the range of serials from The American Buddhist to Buddhist Himalaya. For the user's convenience, when a serial continues from one reel to the next, the Reel Index notes the last issue of the serial on the first reel on which it appears and the first issue of the serial on the next reel.

See the Reel Guide for detailed information about each title. For each publication title in the Reel Guide, issues are listed chronologically, from earliest available issue to the most recent in the collection. Listings of titles with extensive holdings may be continued on the next page of the Reel Guide. Title listings on the Reel Guide may include the following information: Organization which published it; Frequency of publication; Issues list with date information as given in each issue (brackets indicate that month and year information was inferred from copyright or from within the text); Notes; Reel number; and ARC Accession No. (assigned by UCSB to most titles). Serials published by the same organization contain the reference See Also. Serials whose title changed over time contain the reference Is Continued By (later title) or Continues (previous title); these cross references will help the researcher obtain a more complete picture of the serial over its publication run and the organization that published it.

Selection Process

Dr. J. Gordon Melton served as consultant to Primary Source Media in the selection of materials for the microform edition of Nontraditional American Religions: Eastern

Religions: Buddhism, Shintoism, and Japanese New Religions. Selection was based on several criteria:

Relevancy

This microfilm collection comprises selected periodicals and newsletters from the American Religions Collection at the University of California, Santa Barbara. Selections emphasize the relevance of the serials to the development of twentieth-century nontraditional religious groups in the American Buddhism movement.

Rarity

Some periodicals and newsletters were excluded because they can be found in many libraries. Materials available without charge to the public on an organization's website were also excluded.

Research Need

Certain materials were not microfilmed largely because of their relatively low priority with respect to research needs. Examples of such materials include sales catalogs that contain no articles or content information about a group or religious practice.

Insubstantial Runs

Where the American Religion Collection's holdings of a serial were insubstantial, and thus would not provide sufficient information about the history of the serial or the organization it represents, the serial was not selected for the microfilm edition.

Privacy

Some materials could not be microfilmed for reasons of confidentiality. In the interest of protecting the privacy of individuals, a concerted effort was made to exclude newsletters that contained home addresses, phone numbers, or personal financial information of individuals.

Notice of Unfilmed Materials

Serials excluded from the microfilm edition are available to researchers who use the collection on site at the Davidson Library, University of California, Santa Barbara.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The project would not have been possible without assistance from many individuals. Primary Source Media wishes to thank David C. Tambo, Head of Special Collections, Donald C. Davidson Library, University of California, Santa Barbara, and Sarah Pritchard, former University Librarian, for their commitment to making these resources widely available and their support of this project. PSM extends a debt of gratitude to J. Gordon Melton, Director of the Institute for the Study of American Religion, who donated this collection to UCSB and served as PSM's scholar advisor; Dr. Melton recommended publishing this subset of the collection and selected the serials for inclusion. He also wrote the cogent and informative introduction to this microfilm edition. At PSM, Barbara Rader recognized the value of the collection, pursued a contract for it, and served as editorial project manager. Thanks to Kimberly White, who oversaw the materials preparation and creation of the collection guide, and to Daniel Piper, who meticulously reviewed all the files, prepared the materials for microfilming, and entered the data about each serial and issue into the database on which the reel guide is based. Thanks also to PSM's manufacturing department for exemplary work: Barbara Phoenix, who served with dedication as manufacturing project manager; and Michael Lawlor and James Zelem for overseeing the smooth manufacturing operation.
