COLLECTION OVERVIEW

The Women Pioneers Collection, one of the Manuscript Collections Documenting Women in Society at the University of Oregon in Eugene, contains a number of significant materials relating to women's history and history of the Pacific Northwest. The majority of files in this collection are diaries and reminiscences describing overland journeys to Oregon by pioneer families. Additional journals and diaries describe the daily concerns of women living in towns and on farms and ranches in Oregon. The collection is most comprehensive regarding overland journeys, the experiences of white pioneer women in Oregon, and descriptions of missionary, farm, and trading life.

EDITORIAL NOTE

Organization of materials on microfilm

Individual collections of papers appear in alphabetical order by the family name in the title of the collection.

The Aitken Family Papers

Materials that originated after 1920 and the papers of Geraldine Aitken were deselected from publication due to chronological and subject considerations. Researchers are advised to contact the Special Collections and University Archives at the Knight Library, University of Oregon, for access to these files.

Duplicates and Physical Condition of Materials

Some collections include duplicate copies of especially fragile materials or typescripts of fragile manuscripts. In such cases, only the materials in the best physical condition were microfilmed. Materials in fragile physical condition were not microfilmed to avoid the possibility of damage.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This project would not have been possible without assistance from many individuals. Primary Source Microfilm wishes to thank James Fox, director of the Division of Special Collections and University Archives at the University of Oregon Libraries in Eugene, where the original collection resides, for his invaluable support and advice throughout the project. PSM extends gratitude to Linda Long, manuscripts librarian at the Division of Special Collections and University Archives, for her dedication to the smooth running of the project, her responsiveness to myriad questions, and her impeccable cataloging work and reference support. PSM also wishes to thank Dr. Philip J. Roberts of the University of Wyoming for writing an exhaustive introduction to the collection. Finally, PSM acknowledges members of its staff: Olga Virakhovskaya, acquisitions editor, who first recognized the value of this collection and assumed the responsibility for development and publication of the microfilm edition and Barbara Phoenix, who served with dedication as manufacturing project manager. Thanks also to Kimberly White, who oversaw the materials preparation and creation of the collection guide, and Karen Tatarka, who meticulously reviewed all the files, prepared the materials for microfilming, maintained the database on which the reel guide is based, and assisted in creation of the collection guide.

Papers of American Women Pioneers from the Holdings of the Division of Special Collections and University Archives at the University of Oregon Libraries

Historians of the American West, the Pacific Northwest, Native Americans, and nineteenth-century travel will all find gems within these twenty-one collections of diaries, memoirs, reminiscences, and letters penned by generations of pioneer Oregon women. From the broader archival materials held at the University of Oregon Libraries in Eugene, archivists have assembled this microfilm collection. Although historians have not used most of these papers extensively, researchers may find that some extracts are familiar. All manuscripts in this microfilm edition are presented in their original context and form.

These writings by pioneer women range from crudely composed diaries to the polished, typed musings of Oregon Trail travelers written many years after the trip. During the mid-nineteenth century, Oregon became the destination for “westerling” Americans intent on building new lives in the rich agricultural valleys of the Willamette River. In fact, when most people encounter the word diaries in relation to Oregon, they probably think of the Oregon Trail. Starting with the first thirteen travelers in 1840, the overland migration of some 53,000 people west to Oregon in the twenty or so years after 1843 has become part of American mythology. Actual diaries kept by trail travelers are a key component of this microfilm collection.

Given the enormity of the journey, it is surprising that relatively few trail accounts were written—until one considers the daily tasks confronting prospective diarists. After overcoming a dozen or so miles of rocks, hills, desert sands, or valley mud each day, and stopping for the night to care for livestock, cook meals, and prepare for the next day’s journey, it took a dedicated writer to overcome her weariness to scrawl notes of the day’s activities and record impressions of the countryside through which she was passing.

Like mythical journeys everywhere and throughout time, travelers who succeeded in overcoming the many adversities wrote of the exploit of that one trip overland, hauling with them precious personal effects in a wagon barely the size of a modern SUV. These journeys were undertaken at a time when few nineteenth-century Americans traveled beyond the borders of their home states, or even the boundaries of their home counties. Entire generations lived and died within the boundaries of one county. Even travel to a state capital, common for elected representatives, was a once-in-a-decade adventure for most.

A decision to move to the Pacific Northwest was essentially final. These migrants were middle-class farm families who sold land and homes in the East or Midwest, and invested the funds in wagons fit only for the long journey west and pulled by expensive oxen or horses. The travelers saved enough cash to pay for bridge tolls or supplies at the widely spaced trading posts along the trail.

These migrants were not newly arrived immigrants from Europe or poor or working-class urban dwellers who lacked the funds to invest in long-distance travel. They were middle-class farmers convinced by promoters and newspaper stories that they could find a new start in the fertile lands of the Northwest. Consequently, today's reader should not be surprised at the triumphal language in most trail reminiscences. Little wonder that veterans of this journey established societies to celebrate their collective memories. Members of these pioneer societies placed stone markers at important points along the Oregon Trail and shared the adventure that seemed to set them apart from later arrivals who came by rail or motor vehicle.

Some travelers kept diaries during the trip West, while others wrote letters describing the journey. Many more wrote about their trip years later. This collection contains important examples from each of these categories. In some cases, the general themes are predictable—diary entries noting little more than distances traveled, people encountered, and harsh descriptions of the topography through which they were passing. But some writings include insightful reflections about how the trip West affected these women. Indeed, moving to Oregon in the middle of the nineteenth century marked the central epoch in the lives of many migrants. One example is the biography of Caroline Thurman Buffum, who traveled across the plains with her husband in 1845, finally reaching Oregon two years later. Written years after the event, Buffum's biography is representative of a time when such accounts celebrated pioneer achievements, drawing subtle contrasts between the heroic pioneers and the unprecedented waves of new immigrants from Europe who were overwhelming America.

Some recollections of pioneers on these journeys do not portray the trip West as triumphal. In fact, some accounts give the reader a more somber sense of the perseverance and strength many of the journeys required. Julia Thomas (b. 1822) crossed the plains by covered wagon in 1852. Years later, she wrote about how she tried to forget the journey in which her husband became ill, two of their children died, and she and her six-year-old son had to lead the small band slowly westward. The young mother cared for the sick and succeeded in making it to Oregon as they ran low on food and water on the trail. Although such hardships were not a part of her experience, Elizabeth Goltra, who traveled with her family from Kansas City to Oregon City in 1853, describes the journey as "dreary." Goltra's diary provides brief descriptions of the landscapes through which they passed, as well as a record of daily mileage, as though she were assuring herself that each day's travel brought the journey closer to its end.

Some travelers were not leaving prosperous farms, hoping for greater opportunities in Oregon. Arvazena A. Cooper (1845–1929) and her husband, for example, fled the violence of the Civil War in Missouri. Cooper describes problems organizing the wagon train, as well as the antics of her infant child who along with her husband and father-in-law braved the treacherous route West to Oregon's Willamette Valley.

Lydia Rudd, who kept a diary during her 1852 overland migration from Missouri to Burlington, Oregon, recorded distances and described landscapes but also told of trade with other trail travelers as well as with Indians. Her five-month diary ends with a curious statement implying that her trip did not rectify one particular problem in her life: "I expect that we shall not make a claim after all our trouble in getting [t]here on purpose for one. I shall have to be poor and dependent on a man my life time."

One unusual account included in this collection is the travel journal of a teenage girl who made the trip West in the summer of 1866. Jane Eakin's diary is brief, but hers is one of the very few kept by a teenager traveling with her family by wagon train.

Not all immigrants to Oregon traveled by covered wagon or experienced the hardships of trail travel across some of the most barren territory in America. Some more financially comfortable migrants reached the Northwest in later years by stagecoach or even by sea. The reader may contrast the difficulties faced by Julia Thomas or the 1851 journey by Amelia Hadley (1825–1886) with the much more genteel travel experiences of Bell Mallery, a schoolteacher who sailed from New York via Panama to Oregon in 1868.

Trail travel “matured” after the Civil War. When schoolteacher Wyona Eliza Surfus Stahlnecker Gordon traveled from Topeka, Kansas, to Oregon in 1883, her “covered wagon” adventure was far less arduous. In her reminiscences, she contrasts her relatively routine trip with those of “the brave and true ... staunch and undaunted” migrants of earlier years. Viola Springer's diary of her 1885–1886 trek from Missouri to Oregon suggests that some later travelers continued to face considerable adversity, not only in travel but also in settling the land. Springer's detailed insights into her life include references to the constant presence of disease, as well as the arid and less-than-fertile land her family settled in Harney County in eastern Oregon.

Not all travelers' accounts are about the one-time overland migration west to Oregon. Ella A. Stroughton's (1857–1944) three diaries describe her world travels in the early 1880s. From Portland in 1881 she sailed aboard a wheat ship to Liverpool and Belfast, later traveling to Singapore, Shanghai, and Hong Kong, before landing in New York in 1883. After visits with family in the East, she returned to Vancouver, Washington, by rail.

The Women Pioneers Collection is rich in materials for travel historians, but the collection also contains materials of interest to historians of Native Americans. Mollie Truax Crocker (b. 1862), the daughter of a soldier and the wife of a government official, offers insights into life on the Lapwai Agency in Idaho. More unusual is the autobiography of Inez Eugenia Adams Parker (1845–1933). Parker and her family established close ties with a group of Indians who lived near them outside Monmouth, Oregon, in the mid-nineteenth century, and she and her father learned the local language. Parker wrote her autobiography in a pidgin form of this language, and provided English translations.

Researchers should be aware that this collection does not focus solely on travel accounts (although that aspect is its particular strength). Many of these writings are vignettes of ordinary lives, while others depict women pressing the limits of what were considered women's roles. Among these manuscripts are accounts about living in rural Oregon, working on ranches and farms, toiling in orchards, and experiencing family life in the days before television or the automobile. Many of the stories are universal—people facing weather-related adversities, experiencing and trying to understand cultural clashes, suffering from disease, and celebrating the day-to-day joys of family life on the farm or the individual success found in teaching or in another profession.

Once the women who traveled the Oregon Trail arrived in the Pacific Northwest, their multifarious lives encompassed domestic work, community betterment, and professional endeavors. Schoolteachers, for example, kept journals and diaries, in some cases describing typical one-room schoolhouses but in others describing the larger schools in the growing towns west of the mountains. Mollie Crocker writes of operating a general merchandise store in Walla Walla, Washington, while Harriet Nesmith McArthur (1851–1936) tells of barn raising, childrearing, and farming in Oregon during the 1880s.

Thanks to this microfilm collection, researchers will have access to stories not only of Oregon Trail travelers but of some prominent women in public roles in the Pacific Northwest. Nineteenth-century Oregon was home to many literate and politically active women who exerted influence over national issues. One name is familiar to all Western historians—Abigail Scott Duniway (1834–1915). This compilation contains the only known papers of this influential suffragist and editor of the New Northwest (and the mother of prominent university administrator Clyde Duniway). From papers like these, historians can find materials to help them explain the roles women played in reform efforts in the nineteenth-century Northwest and the means by which literate women influenced public discussion, participated in running businesses, and gained admission to the professions.

Drawn from the numerous manuscript collections housed at the University of Oregon, the Women Pioneers microfilm collection includes twenty-one separate manuscript collections ranging from single letters to numerous boxes of written materials—all in their original words and form. Researchers will find within this collection both confirming evidence of women’s roles in American history since the mid-nineteenth century and surprising narratives that may shape new perspectives on the history of the American Northwest, nineteenth-century travel, relations with Native Americans, and the politics of the era. For readers interested in first-hand history, the microfilmed papers comprising the Women Pioneers Collection promise vivid accounts and engaging stories that will both entertain and inform. Despite individual quirks of handwriting and organization within accounts, the entire collection is well worth exploring.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH

Frances Alva, known always as Alva, (1889 – 1970), attended the Oregon Agricultural College, 1908 – 1910. Upon graduating, she taught home economics in junior high and grade schools in Salem, Oregon until 1917 and then went to teach at Woodmere grade school in Portland, Oregon until 1918. Thereafter she held a succession of stenographic positions in Portland, except for a four-year period, 1920 – 1924, in Honolulu. In Portland she lived with her mother and shared her mother's preoccupation with service to the Unitarian Church.

The musical one in the family, Geraldine Aitken attended music school in Boston in 1909. She was teaching music in Hawaii in 1916 at Oahu College, Honolulu until she moved to New York in 1927, teaching at the Seymour School of Musical Reeducation and running a private piano school in Maplewood, New Jersey. She continued to be a private piano teacher in Honolulu when she returned in 1935.

Carrie Aitken (1860–1947) was born Carrie Johnson in Butteville, Oregon. In 1874 she was living with her widowed mother in Portland, Oregon. From 1876 to 1879 she attended Mills Seminary in Benicia, California; in 1880 she went with her mother to Arizona and taught in mining camps. In 1886 she married Alvord Aitken, a businessman in Prescott, Arizona. He died in 1890 when Carrie and her two infant daughters, Alva and Geraldine, were visiting her mother in Oregon. Carrie went on to become a Kindergarten teacher in McMinnville and Portland for about five years, after receiving her training from the Oregon Kindergarten Training School (O.K.T.S.). The rest of her life was spent in Portland where she was active in the Unitarian Church and in charge of its reading room and the Post Office Mission.

Baker, Della M.
Reminiscences of a trip from Portland, Oregon to Dawson,
Yukon Territory in 1898. Garden Home, Oregon 1938.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH

Della Baker lived in Oregon, first in Portland, and then in Garden Home. She traveled to Dawson, Yukon Territory in 1898 and describes her experiences in these reminiscences, which are partly written in verse.

Bannard, Margaret.
The Social Lives of Oregon Pioneers, as described in reminiscent letters, 1903-1904

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH

Little biographical information is available on Margaret Bannard. Presumably she was a young woman in 1903 when she solicited the letters that constitute this collection. She lived in Eugene, Oregon, in 1903 and presented her inquiries for stories on early Oregon pioneer life as part of a research project. She may have collected these stories for course work at the University of Oregon, or for a heritage organization (such as Pioneer Women's clubs), or for other reasons.

Combs, Amelia R.

[Report on questions asked of Lane County pioneers relative to location of Skinner cabin, history of Columbia College, and the first Eugene court], July 8, 1906

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH

As a member of Native Daughters, Amelia Combs gathered statistical information from Oregon pioneers who came to Lane County between the years of 1847 and 1853. Combs questioned 12 pioneers about the location of the Skinner Cabin and Columbia College. She also inquired when the first Eugene Court was held. Little context is offered by this collection on the origin and make-up of the Native Daughters association; nevertheless, the organization seems to follow in the same vein as other heritage associations. Moreover, little additional information is known about Combs, or her fellow "Native Daughters" members.

The Arvazena A. Cooper Papers, 1845-1900

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH

Born in Kentucky in 1845, Arvazena A. Cooper spent her formative years in southwestern Missouri. At sixteen, she married Daniel Jackson Cooper (May 1861) and eight months later, their first child arrived. Cooper described the violence that plagued them in Missouri during the Civil War and cites this as the reason she and her husband decided to move to the Far West. In 1863, Cooper, her husband, father-in-law, and infant set out by wagon for the state of Oregon. The family settled in the Willamette Valley.

Cooper settled near Corvallis, Oregon, and performed the duties expected of mid-nineteenth-century wives and mothers. She bore thirteen children in Oregon (and one en route). She managed her growing household by caring for and nursing her children and her husband; she prepared their food and made their clothes. Cooper's commitment to child rearing extended beyond her own family. Cooper contributed to the building of Farm Home, a Corvallis receiving home for orphans. She saw her fifteen children grow to adulthood as well as some of her grandchildren. Cooper died in 1929 and is buried in The Dalles, Oregon.

Crocker, Mollie Truax.
The Pioneer Life of Mollie Truax Crocker, 1862-c. 1890

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH

Mollie Truax Crocker was born June 3, 1862, in Oregon City, Oregon. Crocker's father was a soldier who traveled with his family throughout the Northwest to different military posts. He became a post trader at Fort Walla Walla and the Lapwai Indian Agency. Consequently, Crocker lived in Idaho, Oregon, and Washington before the family settled permanently in Walla Walla, Washington, following her father's retirement.

In 1880, Crocker married David Benjamin Crocker and the two made their home on the Lapwai Agency where their two children were born. Eventually, Crocker and her family returned to Walla Walla.

D’Arcy, Marianne Hunsaker.
Reminiscences of Marianne Hunsaker D’Arcy, 1937-1939

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH

Marianne, often “Mary,” Hunsaker D’Arcy came from a family of twelve children. Born in Illinois, D’Arcy left for Oregon when she was only three and a half or four years old. Beginning a journey so early on in life caused D’Arcy to mature quickly, and to endure the hardships life dealt her during the trip. Once, she was run over by the wagon, but she reported in her memoir that she did not recall incurring any injuries. Her family settled in Fruit Hill, near Oregon City, where D’Arcy’s grandfather purchased land for a family home.

Abigail Scott Duniway Papers

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH

Abigail Jane Scott was born in Tazewella County, Illinois, on October 22, 1834. She was the third of twelve children of Ann Roelofson and John Tucker Scott. Abigail, whose family nickname was “Jenny,” received only about 12 months of formal education. The Scotts crossed the plains to Oregon when Abigail was 17-years-old, and she kept the family journal of their journey. Her mother and youngest brother, Willie, died en route to Oregon. Abigail’s journal served as the basis of her 1859 novel Captain Gray’s Company, the first commercially printed novel in Oregon.

Duniway (then Scott) became a teacher in the small town of Cincinnati (now Eola), Oregon, while her family ran an inn in Lafayette. There, she met Benjamin Charles Duniway and married him August 2, 1853. The newlyweds moved to Ben’s Clackamas County farm. After a few years, the Duniways moved to Yamhill County where Abigail started to write her first novel as well as anonymous letters to local newspapers. The Duniways lost their farm because Ben cosigned loans for a friend who defaulted following a catastrophic flood. The Duniways then moved to Lafayette, where Abigail taught school and ran a millinery shop while Ben created a washing machine and bred horses.

Duniway’s thoughts and writings began to turn to suffrage in the 1860s. In 1871, she moved her family to Portland and, in May of that year, launched her weekly newspaper, The New North West. She also began to lecture throughout the Northwest along with nationally-renown suffragist Susan B. Anthony. Duniway sold her newspaper in 1886.

The Duniways had six children: Clara, Willis, Hubert, Wilkie, Clyde and Ralph. Clara died at a young age in 1886. Willis went on to be State Printer; Hubert became a lumber exporter; Wilkie was a printer for various Portland papers; Clyde became a professor and president of three universities, and Ralph was a prominent Portland attorney. Ben Duniway died in 1896.

Abigail Duniway was an indefatigable supporter of women’s suffrage. She encountered personal set-backs such as poor health, money problems, and opposition from her brother Harvey Scott, who edited a local paper, The Portland Oregonian. She persisted despite political opposition in the form of local resistance, the consistent failure of women’s suffrage referendums on state ballots, and divisions with Eastern suffrage organizations. This persistence paid off in 1912 when Oregon became the seventh state in the Union to pass a women’s suffrage amendment. Governor Oswald West asked Duniway to write the proclamation for his signature. Duniway had the honor of being the first woman to register to vote in Multnomah County. During this period she also authored numerous novels. Abigail Jane Scott Duniway died on October 11, 1915.

Eakin, Jane. [Diary of a Trip Across the Plains from Illinois to Eugene, Oregon in 1866].

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH

Jane Paul Eakin (also known as “Jennie”) left Chicago Heights, Illinois, in April 1866 and began a four-month journey by wagon to Eugene, Oregon. She traveled with her family – including her parents, one set of grandparents, and a number of siblings (she mentions five in her diary). Little is known about Eakin’s life before or after her migration to Oregon. She appears to have married later and changed her surname to Hanna.

Evans, S.D.
A Trip from Washoe, Nevada to Douglas County, Oregon, 1863

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH

Mrs. S.D. Evans lived in Northern California in 1861 when her husband was killed by local Native Americans. Evans moved to Washoe, Nevada, and from there, in 1863, she moved to Douglas County, Oregon. She made the journey accompanied by her two children as well as two other wagon teams. The group survived numerous attacks by Indians along the way. At the successful end of this journey, Evans settled on a farm in Douglas County.

The Elizabeth J. Goltra Papers, 1853

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH

Elizabeth J. Goltra migrated from Kansas City, Missouri, to Oregon City, Oregon, in 1853. She married Keeler Farrington on February 24th, 1861. This collection offers little biographical information on Goltra beyond these statistics, but the collection contains genealogical information on previous generations of the Goltra family in North America.

Hadley, Amelia.
[Journal of Trip from Galesburg, Illinois to Oregon City, Oregon,
April 14 to August 23, 1851.]

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH

The woman known after marriage as Amelia Hadley [possibly also E. A. Hadley] was born in 1825 near Cleveland, Ohio. She married Samuel Hadley in Illinois in April 1851 and the two immediately set out for Oregon Territory. They lived several years in Oregon, then California, before moving permanently back to Oregon in 1862. Between 1852 and 1866, they had eight children and adopted one more. The collection comprises Hadley's journal and a copy of Hadley's reminiscences as dictated by Hadley to journalist Fred Lockley.

Laura, Judy.
Caroline Thurman Buffman, Pioneer of 1845.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH

Laura Judy wrote 3 papers on “Pioneer Women of Amity” for the Amity Study Club. Judy appears to be the niece of Buffum. Little additional information on Judy is available.

Caroline Thurman was born in 1814, in Ohio. She moved to Fulton County, Illinois, where she married William Gilbert Buffum in 1828 at the age of 14 (her husband was 24). In spring of 1845, she and her husband started across the plains to Oregon. They reached Oregon in 1847. Buffum died on November 5, 1895.

[Diary by Ella Stoughton of a Voyage Around the World, a Residence in New England, and of Life at Home in Vancouver, W.T.,
May 26, 1881 - September 30, 1886.]

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH

Ella A. Stoughton (1857 – 1944) was the daughter of Joseph Hibbard Stoughton, Washington State pioneer from New England. In 1887, she married Doran Harding Stearns of LaCamas, Washington, who later founded the Portland Bee. She was active in Portland civic affairs, and wrote occasional articles for the Portland Oregonian.

In 1881 she left Portland, Oregon, on the Hubert Black, a wheat ship bound for Liverpool and Belfast. From Liverpool the ship sailed to Singapore, Shanghai, Nagasaki, and Hong Kong, thence to New York, arriving July 20, 1883. Stoughton visited relatives in New England, took a trip to Montreal and Toronto and, in May 1884, returned by railroad to her home in Vancouver. In December 1885, the Washington Territorial Legislature appointed her its enrolling clerk of the House. Later, she worked in Olympia-area law offices. The final diary entries contain repeated references to Doran H. Stearns, who eventually would become Stoughton's spouse. Stoughton-Stearns made her home in La Camas (or LaCamas), Washington.
