INTRODUCTION

The National Coordinating Committee to End the War in Vietnam (NCC) was developed as the first in a series of short-lived, ad hoc attempts to guide the burgeoning anti-Vietnam war movement during the 1960s. On April 17, 1965, the Students for a Democratic Society (SDS) sponsored the first large march on Washington against the war, but despite its success by the end of June, SDS had decided not to become overly committed to the anti-war movement. During the early months of 1965 many local anti-war groups were established around the country. Besides joining in the April 17 march, these committees held teach-ins, demonstrations, and occasionally affiliated with the older peace organizations such as Committee for a SANE Nuclear Policy (SANE) or Women Strike for Peace. At a Berkeley teach-in on May 21-22, 1965, Staughton Lynd proposed an Assembly of Unrepresented People to improve the tactics used in both the civil rights and peace movements. Participants in this teach-in also agreed to organized demonstrations for the following October that would be international in scope.

The Assembly of Unrepresented People in Washington, D.C., on August 6-9, 1965, brought together civil rights activists and peace proponents from throughout the country. There they shared their common experiences, which included a frustrating lack of national direction and communication. A workshop, two hundred persons strong, on national coordination proposed the formation of the National Coordinating Committee. The assembly adopted this scheme on August 9; by that afternoon many of the NCC's leaders including its national secretary Frank Emspak, had been jailed for protesting against the war at the Capitol. This incident was indicative of the NCC's tone: militant, but non-violent.

The committee's headquarters were located in Madison, Wisconsin, with regional offices established in New York City and Washington, D.C. and three to six travelers around the country. The decision to establish headquarters in Madison exemplified the desire to cement the NCC's uneasy alliance of radical pacifists, moderate pacifists, Communists and Socialists, and reform Democrats. In Madison, which was centrally located and already well organized against the war, the local anti-war groups cooperated with little ideological bickering. The NCC's primary units of organization, however, consisted of approximately two to three hundred local anti-war groups. These included both ad-hoc committees and local chapters of various liberal and radical societies. Each group was theoretically represented on the NCC's steering committee; this committee determined policies and programs and served as the link between the local groups and the national staff. A standing committee composed of Lynd, David Dellinger, Jerry Rubin, Jack Weinberg, Irving Beinin, Tom Shields, David Berkley, and Frank Emspak directed decision-making between meetings of the steering committee. The national staff, never numbering more than about a dozen individuals, possessed little power to initiate policies, but it was responsible for publishing the Peace and Freedom News.

The success of the October 15-16, 1965, First International Days of Protest increased the stakes involved in the struggle to control the swelling anti-war movement. Over one hundred thousand persons in fifty American cities participated in what was then the largest outpouring of anti-war sentiment. The November 28, 1965, March on Washington, sponsored by SANE, again displayed the grassroots sentiment against military involvement in Vietnam. The NCC held a national convention the week before this November demonstration (Nov. 25-28) at which time a caucus demanding the immediate withdrawal of American troops from Vietnam established a newsletter, Bring the Troops Home Now. The caucus, composed largely of radical pacifists and Socialist Workers Party (SWP) members, did not succeed in changing the basic policies and positions of the NCC due to the opposition of moderate pacifists, Communists, and reform-Democrats. The convention also mandated a Second International Days of Protest for March 25-26, 1966.

The Second International Day of Protest occurred in nearly a hundred cities and towns throughout the U.S. as well as in over thirty foreign countries. This very success led, however, to further debates within the NCC. Radical pacifists and SWP members desired to continue organizing demonstrations; liberals and Communist Party members preferred to turn to electoral politics; and new left radicals disliked the use of the NCC as a recruiting ground for older organizations and envisioned a new, radical organization which transcended both electoral politics and massive, non-ideological demonstrations.

During the spring of 1966, the continuing discussion over the NCC's direction remained unresolved. An effort to alleviate this problem at a conference was rejected by the local anti-war committees as too great a drain on their limited resources. The NCC staff did, however, attempt to coordinate the formation of community anti-war projects for the summer of 1966. Towards this goal, a conference was held at Antioch College on June 10-16, 1966, to discuss topics such as American imperialism, organizing tactics, and the role of China in the Southeast Asian conflict. While the NCC's summer organizing program achieved some moderate successes, the focus of the anti-war movement began to shift away from the NCC, which was being increasingly crippled by factionalism.

Another organization, the Fifth Avenue Peace Parade Committee, arose to sponsor demonstrations on August 6-7, 1966. This New York-based group drew much of its support from radical pacifists, SWP members, and others associated with the caucus that established the Bring the Troops Home Now Newsletter. A series of conferences held during the summer and early fall of 1966 further eroded NCC's leadership. These meetings exacerbated the internal tensions within the NCC and witnessed the formation of another anti-war group--the Fall Mobilization Committee to direct the October and November 1966 mass demonstrations.

The foundation of the Fall Mobilization Committee as well as the electoral campaigns of peace candidates like Robert Scheer in California and Thomas Adams in Massachusetts drew staff, funding, and public support from the NCC. Although it assisted these efforts, it no longer coordinated them. During the winter of 1966-1967, the NCC redirected its focus towards state-wide organizing. Some staff members hoped to establish a grassroots, radical anti-war movement throughout Wisconsin to include clergymen, small farmers, blue-collar workers, professionals, and students; however, the attempt failed. Gradually the staff members either became involved in other Madison organizations or left the city.

SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

Primary Source Media's microfilm publication America in Protest: Records of Anti-Vietnam War Organizations, Part 2: National Coordinating Committee to End the War in Vietnam, 1964-1967 is divided into two groups: Intra-Organizational Records and Correspondence.

The Intra-Organizational Records contain correspondence, fragmentary financial records, minutes, notes, proposals, and reports which pertain to the NCC's steering and standing committees, conferences sponsored by the NCC and other anti-war groups, reports of staff trips and meetings, and various projects such as the International Days of Protest. This section of the records provides revealing information about the NCC's operations and its internal disputes. The files of several conferences and staff meetings include summarized minutes, correspondence, planning material, and some lists of participants. Publications include rough drafts of articles, as well as drafts of several issues of Peace and Freedom News. Printed copies of the newsletter are available in the State Historical Society Library. There are also NCC leaflets, press releases, and some publications of the Research and Information Committee.

Correspondence is divided into three sections: 1) foreign country files, with correspondence from both individuals and organizations arranged by nation and chronologically thereunder except for Canada, which is subdivided by city; 2) alphabetical files, from individuals in the United States, which are arranged by the first two letters of the correspondent's surname; and 3) locality files, from various anti-war groups throughout the United States arranged alphabetically by state, city, and organization. The vast majority of this correspondence concerns the national and international anti-war movement, though some touches on related topics such as civil rights, political elections, and disputes between various leftist and anti-war groups.

SOURCE AND EDITORIAL NOTE

The documents reproduced in this publication are from the holdings of the Wisconsin Historical Society Archives and encompass the Records of the National Coordinating Committee to End the War in Vietnam, Mss 278. The documents comprising Mss 278 have been filmed in their entirety. The Micro 807m microfilmed press clippings have not been included in this publication due to copyright issues.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Primary Source Media would like to acknowledge Dr. Peter Gottlieb, Carolyn Mattern, and the staff at the Wisconsin Historical Society for their support of this microfilm publication.

PRINCIPAL CORRESPONDENTS INDEX

The following index is a guide to the major correspondents in this microfilm publication. The first number after each entry refers to the reel, while the number following the colon refers to a numbered folder on that reel. Hence 6: 76, 77 directs the researcher to the folders numbered 76 and 77 on reel 6. Each folder is located on the reel in numerical order and introduced with a title page. These correspondents will not necessarily be found at the beginning of the designated folder, but will be located within it. By referring to the Reel Index, which constitutes the initial section of this guide, the researcher will find the folder title, inclusive dates, and a list of major subjects, arranged in the order they appear on the film.

SUBJECT INDEX

The following index is a guide to major subjects found in this microfilm publication. The first number after each entry refers to the reel, while the number following the colon refers to a numbered folder on that reel. Hence 9:111, 112 directs the researcher to the folders numbered 111 and 112 on reel 9. Each folder is located on the reel in numerical order and introduced with a title page. These subjects will not necessarily be found at the beginning of the designated folder, but will be located within it. This subject index is best used in conjunction with the reel index, which lists not only folder numbers, but folder titles as well.
