Cover Photographs: [1] FBI Transporting Foreigners to Ellis Island at World War II Startup Original caption: New York: Immediately after the declaration of war with Japan, Germany and Italy, enemy aliens were picked up and sent to Ellis Island. Here is a patrol wagon arriving at the Ellis Island Ferry. An F.B.I. man on the extreme left guides a prisoner. There were seven of them in this particular wagon. One was a Japanese and the rest were German and Italian. All the prisoners tried to hide their faces. 1942. Unknown. SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

Enemy Aliens. Terrorism. Patriot Act and civil liberties.

“Accusations that the Patriot Act infringes on the rights of Americans and aliens alike...” “Without surveillance of aliens—national security could be compromised.” “FBI surveillance in wartime...” These issues have been prominent in the news media for several years. But, the history of the twin issues of national security and surveillance of aliens is not new. Since the founding of the nation, these issues have been in the forefront of political debate. From the Alien and Sedition Acts in 1798, to the Enemy Aliens Act of 1917, the Federal government has maintained surveillance of those opposed to the American way of life. This new microfilm collection provides insights into the recent history of the surveillance of aliens and national security during World War II.

Pre-World II Surveillance Efforts

Before the United States entered the war in 1941, the FBI concentrated its efforts on locating, infiltrating, and dismantling political organizations sympathetic to German and Italian Fascism, and Soviet Communism, despite the latter nation's wartime alliance with Britain and France. President Franklin D. Roosevelt, and Secretary of State Cordell Hull, pushed for increased power for the FBI to investigate perceived subversives, even if these people were ordinary American citizens. A 1939 presidential directive, followed by the Smith Act of 1940, outlawed public advocacy of overthrowing the government. President Roosevelt in May 1940, authorized the FBI to conduct warrant-less electronic surveillance of persons suspected of subversion or espionage; surveillance was to be limited insofar as possible to aliens.

In June 1939, J. Edgar Hoover reactivated the dreaded General Intelligence Division and compiled a secret Custodial Detention list of persons to be jailed summarily during wartime. FBI officials opened first-class mail and regularly practiced, with Roosevelt's explicit blessing, wiretapping, despite the 1939 Supreme Court ruling that the Federal Communications Act of 1934 proscribed government wiretapping. The executive branch instituted a loyalty program for federal job holders and the Attorney General drew up his first list of subversive organizations.

Wartime Surveillance Efforts

When the United States entered the war, FBI agents aided national defense efforts by placing trained agents at key military and defense industry sites. Wartime agents received more intense training in counterintelligence measures, and the FBI established special counterintelligence units for covert operations at the government's discretion. FBI agents thwarted German and Japanese attempts at sabotaging national interests, including fuel reserves. The FBI's surveillance workload during World War II was enormous: over 1 million registered "enemy" aliens were living in the U.S.; many were nationals from Axis power nations awaiting citizenship.

Postwar Surveillance Efforts

When World War II ended in August 1945, increasingly hostile relations between the United States and the Soviet Union led to the Cold War, a diplomatic and military standoff that lasted over six decades. In the early Cold War years, the American government, and many members of the public, worried about the presence of Communist organizations and spies within the United States. The need for extraordinary national security surveillance measures remained high, leading to widespread use of wiretapping by law enforcement.

SUBJECT INDEX

The following index is a guide to the major subjects in this microfilm publication. The first number after each entry refers to the reel, while the four-digit number following the colon refers to the frame number at which a particular file folder containing information on the subject begins. Hence, 14:0352 directs the researcher to the documents that begin at Frame 0352 of Reel 14. By referring to the Reel Index, the researcher will find the folder title and major subjects.
