SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

The debate over the “loss of China” has dragged on for years. The existing scholarship on U.S.-China relations has been dominated by diplomatic themes. In exploring the possible lost chance in economic and cultural relations, this microfilm collection challenges prevailing views. It presents the declassified materials that present a kind of “case study” on the approach of the Economic Cooperation Administration toward China and the Communists in the postwar era.

This collection presents how ECA officials looked for economic and cultural opportunities to promote U.S.-China relations, despite the prevailing Cold War suspicions of any and all communists which dominated the minds of American policymakers.

Documentation presents:

- ECA efforts to urge the State Department to pursue a friendly economic policy toward Communist China and not to jeopardize U.S.-China economic relations;
- The ECA represented the opinion of many American businessmen, in the face of State Department and White House opposition;
- Decision following the failure of the Marshall Mission to China to politicize the U.S. economic policy toward China;
- Effectiveness of the ECA’s implementation of aid to China; and,
- Information on the China Aid Act as part of Title IV of the Foreign Assistance Act.

The ECA was established in part because of the outbreak of the Cold War. In the postwar period, the situation in Europe and the Middle East became precarious, and the influence of the Soviet Union and communism in Europe was increasing. Concerned about this situation, President Truman announced the Truman Doctrine to contain the spread of Communism. Under this program, the ECA emerged as an economic devise to contain the expansion of communism on a global scale.

In the postwar period, the political and economic crisis in China received great attention in America. Congress approved the China Aid Act, as Title IV of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1948. It would provide $125 million grant in military aid and $338 million in economic aid to China. The ECA’s mission to China would concentrate on commodities programs, industrial reconstruction and replacement issues, and rural reconstruction.

Harland Cleveland, ECA mission to China director, encouraged U.S. policymakers to exercise its influence through several activities:

- Encourage any potential in deviation of Chinese Communist policy from an orientation toward the Soviet Union and strengthen those within the Chinese Communist Party who advocated a more “Chinese policy;”
- Preserve the goodwill of the Chinese people toward the United States;
- Protect American investments and promote American commercial interests in the Far East;
- Emphasize the advantages that would accrue to China through U.S. technical assistance and economic development;
- Give encouragement or assistance to anti-Communist elements; and
- Retain access to valuable resources and markets in China for other Far eastern areas in which the U.S. was interested, especially Japan.

Following much debate and aid efforts to the Chinese people, whether communist or nationalist, the U.S. policymakers ruled out the possibility of aiding and developing economic relations with Communist China, instead it threatened economic sanction to influence Chinese Communist behavior. Consequently, the ECA mission to China had to taper off as the Chinese Communists consolidated their control of the mainland.

This collection is the definitive source of American reporting on political, military, social, and economic developments in postwar China. These files consist of thousands of pages arranged topically and chronologically on crucial subjects, such as: humanitarian assistance, political conditions, military affairs, labor, unrest and revolution, human rights, housing, fuel, public health, social conditions, culture, trade, industry, and natural resources. On these subjects and many more, this collection offers authoritative, in-depth, and timely documentation and analysis that has not been available to researchers until now.

SUBJECT INDEX

The first number after each entry refers to the reel, while the number following the colon refers to a frame number on that reel. Hence 6:0106 directs the researcher to the folder beginning on frame 0106 of reel 6. These subjects will not necessarily be found at the beginning of the designated folder, but will be located within it. This Subject Index is best used in conjunction with the Reel Index, which lists not only frame numbers, but folder titles as well.
