INTRODUCTION

The name of Nathanael Greene was anything but a household word in the United States in 1971 when the Rhode Island Historical Society proposed a letter-press edition of his papers. Born into a Quaker family in Warwick, Rhode Island, in 1742, and largely self-educated, Greene sprang from the relative obscurity of a Warwick anchormith and small merchant to become in 1775 at the age of thirty-two the youngest general in the Continental army.

Without previous military experience, he went on to become a major general in the Continental army and one of George Washington's most successful division commanders, quartermaster general of the army, adviser to Washington on strategy, and, finally, commander of the Southern army. In 1781 and 1782 he succeeded in driving the British army out of the Carolinas and Georgia. He was the only general officer besides Washington to serve continuously throughout the eight years of war. He died in June 1786 at the age of forty-three on a Georgia plantation, given to him by a grateful people. He was buried in Savannah, his grave marked today by a thirty-foot obelisk in a prominent city square. Although widely honored by his contemporaries, his early death denied him a noteworthy place in the pantheon of Revolutionary heroes.

Historians, however, have long acknowledged his role. The nineteenth-century English historian John Fortescue called Greene a "very noble character," who "stands little if at all lower than Washington as a general in the field." In 1941, American historian Christopher Ward called him "Washington's right arm." In the opinion of some qualified judges, Ward wrote, he was "Washington's superior, both as a strategist and as a tactician." Washington's biographer, Douglas Southall Freeman, thought that next to the commander in chief, Greene did "the most in the field to achieve Independence." Most present-day military historians agree with these assessments.

Publication of Greene's Papers

Almost 9,700 documents had been found when the University of North Carolina Press published Volume 1 of The Papers of General Nathanael Greene in 1976 for the Rhode Island Historical Society. Since there was no foreseeable funding for printing and annotating so many documents, the only practicable alternative was a selective edition, in which many documents of importance would be of necessity excluded. Some editors of selective editions have chosen to print only a small portion of their documents and to issue in advance a microfilm of all original manuscripts, including those to follow in the printed volumes. This alternative was rejected by the editors of the Nathanael Greene Papers, because so many photocopies of the documents that had been collected from various repositories were too poor to be reproduced legibly on microfilm.

It was decided, instead, to abstract (or calendar) documents of lesser importance in the printed volumes and to make available a separate microfilm of the typed transcripts of original manuscripts, including those documents to be printed in full. Typescripts are not only far easier to read than the handwriting of most eighteenth-century letter writers, but they also take up much less film. Some 20 percent of the documents in Volume 1 were abstracted—a percentage that was increased in later volumes to 65 percent.

As stated in the Introduction to Volume 1, the “first and most fundamental goal” of an editor is “to transcribe a document as faithfully as possible.” The “editor/transcriber has the advantage over the casual researcher through familiarity with the handwriting and modes of expression common to the period, as well as with the particular styles of the individuals involved.” Errors in transcriptions of handwriting can never be entirely eliminated, but the editors of the Nathanael Greene Papers have set the same standards of accuracy for the microfilm edition as they established for the printed volumes. That standard requires that a minimum of three editors check the typescript of every document against the photocopied original. Evidence of the changes and corrections they have made in the process is seen in the handwritten changes in the typescripts.

Where copies of the letterpress edition are available, the readers of the film will find it helpful to use them in conjunction with the microfilm. Especially useful are the indexes of the printed volumes, which cover the subject matter of calendared documents as well as those fully printed. They also will find the annotations helpful.

Included in these four reels are approximately one-third of the documents that have been collected as of August 1988. The other two-thirds of the typescripts will be issued nearer the end of the project.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Since the inception of the Nathanael Greene Papers, it has been both a necessity and a pleasure to have the assistance of numerous individuals and institutions. In addition to the institutional sponsors listed above, the acknowledgments in the first five letterpress volumes of the Papers of General Nathanael Greene credit all those who helped to provide the material and resources that comprise this microform edition.

Most, if not all, former and current members of the staff of the Papers of General Nathanael Greene also must be credited. Special thanks to Richard K. Showman, editor of the project; Dennis M. Conrad, associate editor; Mary MacKechnie Showman, Elizabeth C. Stevens, Margaret Cobb, Nathaniel N. Shipton, Noel P. Conlon, Susan M. Bowler, and E. Wayne Carp. Laurie L. Weinstein-Farson deserves much more than special thanks for retyping hard-to-read transcripts and for typing a good part of this guide.

Albert T. Klyberg, director of the Rhode Island Historical Society, always has been and will continue to be a beacon by which the Greene Papers can be guided. Pat Mende, business manager of the Historical Society, usually has been able to keep us afloat financially and has been a true friend.

Many at Scholarly Resources should be mentioned. Daniel C. Helmstadter, president, and Richard M. Hopper, acquisitions editor, helped to launch this effort. Philip G. Johnson, managing editor, helped at various stages in the process of moving it along. Special thanks must be given to James L. Preston, production manager, who provided invaluable aid throughout the project.

HISTORY OF GREENE'S PAPERS

The search for the papers of Nathanael Greene began in the summer of 1972 and has not yet ended. By May 1988 the editors had assembled photocopies of some nine thousand letters to and from Greene and more than seven hundred documents originated by him, including military orders. More than 90 percent of the total were written during the War for Independence, constituting—aside from Washington's—the largest body of papers of a Continental army general.

The Clements Library, with over four thousand documents (plus many concerning Greene), has by far the largest collection. The National Archives, the Library of Congress, and the American Philosophical Society Library account for another twenty-five hundred, while the remainder (except for sixty-some items in private hands) are scattered among one hundred repositories. At least five hundred are copied from nineteenth-century transcripts or printed versions of originals that have since disappeared.

A large proportion of the documents have variant copies. It is not uncommon to have a draft, an autograph copy, and a contemporary copy of the same letter. Nineteenth-century transcripts of Greene letters are numerous. Copies of more than four thousand have been received, twenty-six hundred of them collected by Greene's grandson and biographer, George Washington Greene, and now in the Huntington Library; the rest are found principally among the papers of Jared Sparks, Harvard College Library; Peter Force, Library of Congress; George Bancroft, New York Public Library; and Lyman Draper, State Historical Society of Wisconsin. Copies of three dozen transcripts of Greene's letters to his wife have been made available by Bernard Nightingale of Brunswick, Georgia. Transcripts have often proved invaluable in the transcribing of damaged originals.

Of the almost ten thousand documents that have been photocopied, the vast majority—perhaps four-fifths—have been fairly accessible to the diligent researcher. The remainder have been difficult or even impossible to locate through conventional finding aids. These have offered the greatest challenge—and the greatest reward. As Leonard W. Labaree once wrote: "Editors are psychologically much like the biblical shepherd who rejoices far more over the one lost sheep that is found than over the ninety and nine that never strayed from the fold."<sup>1</sup> Many such strays have turned up in institutions where one would not ordinarily expect to find Revolutionary War manuscripts, such as the Polish Museum of Chicago, the Western Reserve Historical Society in Cleveland, the Detroit Public Library, or the Savitz Library of Glassboro (NJ) State College. Some have rested, unknown to scholars, in such unsuspected places as the New Jersey Department of Defense.

Most, however, have hidden uncataloged—and sometimes unseen—in the major repositories. One of the first things an editor learns is that few institutions have had the staff or funds to keep abreast of cataloging manuscripts. The countless hours the editors have spent in leafing through catalog cards or manuscript pages of Greene's principal correspondents have been rewarded by the addition of several hundred documents.

Equally rewarding, though even more laborious, has been the task of looking at reels of microfilm, frame by frame. At the Library of Congress and the National Archives, the editors have been aided in such searching by staff members of the National Historical Publications and Records Commission.

Occasionally, an entire parcel of uncataloged Greene letters has been turned up. One of the most valuable of such discoveries was made by William Joyce of the American Antiquarian Society, who came across thirty-some letters from Greene to his brothers that had lain uncataloged since they were donated in 1917. Transcripts of a dozen letters from Greene to his brother Jacob were similarly found among the papers of Theodore Foster in our own Rhode Island Historical Society Library.

Hundreds of documents continue to be held by individuals. Where they are known, a direct appeal almost always has elicited a favorable response, but general appeals have failed to reach most of the unidentified owners of manuscripts. Some of those who have been reached have failed to respond—perhaps from inertia or from the mistaken notion that printing a document diminishes its value. The editors can only hope that this edition will bring out more copies of letters still in private hands.

The sheer number of Greene's correspondents is impressive (three hundred persons with four or more documents from each), but even more impressive is the number of Revolutionary leaders who are represented. Included are all of the presidents of the Continental Congress, the War Board, almost all of the state governors, and most of the major generals of the Continental army, as well as men of lesser rank who served under Greene. His correspondence with Washington is by all odds the most voluminous, with over six hundred letters between them, including those written for Washington over an aide's name.

The Southern campaign accounts for well over half of the total. Much of the correspondence was with partisan leaders and the Continental officers who served with Greene. One hundred letters to and from Francis Marion have survived; over one hundred thirty of Thomas Sumter, and two hundred of "Light-Horse Harry" Lee. From the year 1781 alone, more than twenty-four hundred documents have come down to us. And, finally, there are personal letters—five hundred of them between 1770 and 1786, including eighty from Greene to his wife.

That so many documents should have survived the rigors of war, not to mention the vicissitudes of two intervening centuries, is little short of miraculous. The chief hazard confronting wartime documents was the mobility of the army. During the eight and one-half years that Greene served, he had a total of twenty-four separate headquarters from Massachusetts to South Carolina. From each one, moreover, he made innumerable excursions, operating out of a saddlebag and field desk. Most of his correspondents were equally mobile. Some—especially the partisan leaders in the Carolinas—were constantly on the move. Even the Continental Congress moved six times during his tenure.

Greene's own collection of his papers must have had many narrow escapes as it was periodically boxed and shipped either by water or by wagon along backcountry roads. Some of the near disasters are documented. When, for example, his brigade was en route from Boston to New York in April 1776, the transports out of New London encountered a storm that swept baggage from the deck of one vessel and turned several back to port.<sup>2</sup> When Lord Cornwallis made a surprise landing near Fort Lee in November that same year, Greene had only minutes to gather up his possessions and to evacuate the fort.<sup>3</sup> Near the war's end, he came close to losing all his records; on returning to his quarters in Charleston, he found his room ablaze, with some thirty books already burned.<sup>4</sup> Fortunately, the fire was extinguished before any papers were destroyed.

Many papers escaped destruction through sheer good fortune; others—especially official letters—often survived through some form of duplication, which amounted in effect to survival insurance: these included drafts, file copies, copies made of incoming mail, circular letters, and letters printed in newspapers. When Greene was in enemy territory, he often sent two copies of a letter via two different riders to ensure that one got through. At least one such letter has come down to us from the British Public Records Office. It did not get through.

Good fortune, however, did not always ride with his papers. Those that he had accumulated between May 1775 and April 1778 have disappeared. No positive evidence of the disappearance has ever turned up, but the negative evidence is persuasive. For the three-year period, for example, there are no drafts or file copies of his letters; after April 1778 there are almost two thousand. Of the hundreds of letters that he received in the three-year period, only twenty-five recipients' copies have reappeared, and they seem in each case to have survived only because he sent them on to other persons—nine of them now being in the Washington Papers. There are, of course, many retained copies of letters to him kept by the senders.

Not all of the missing letters were victims of accident. He once wrote to his brother Christopher: "I make it a constant rule to burn all [letters from the brothers] that contain family secrets, as soon as I have read them."<sup>5</sup> He did save business letters from Jacob (which contained some family secrets), but only three letters from his other four brothers have survived. Fortunately, his brothers did not follow his rule, since his letters to them are the most revealing we have.

He did not destroy his wife's letters to him, but someone apparently did. Catharine Greene is the most likely suspect since she had both motive and opportunity. Her motive could well have been embarrassment over her poor grammar and spelling (which he once criticized), and she had ample opportunity to destroy the letters during the twenty-eight years his personal papers were in her possession. Fortunately, unlike Martha Washington, she did not destroy her husband's letters to her.

During the last months of the war, Greene put his papers in some order, filling two trunks with six thousand documents—divided into personal and official papers. Since much of the quartermaster correspondence had been left with his deputy, Charles Pettit, the bulk of the official papers in his possession concerned the Southern campaign. He had given some thought to writing an account of the campaign based on the papers, for he had told John Adams that the "measures which led to important events and the reasons for these measures must lay in the dark, untill a more leisure hour."<sup>6</sup>

He was also concerned that Congress have copies of the papers. On his return north in the autumn of 1783, he stopped at Princeton, where Congress was then meeting, and there, at the suggestion of President Elias Boudinot, he wrote the following letter:

The letters and miscellaneous papers containing a history of the most material parts of the Southern operations may contain some things which Congress or their officers may hereafter have occasion to refer to. Loose files are easily disordered and where recourse is often had to them papers often get lost.

If Congress should think it an object worthy the expence and would indulge my wishes, I should be glad to get the whole papers transcribed into bound books. Having taken the liberty of suggesting my wishes I shall be happy to take the trouble of directing the business if Congress will be at the expence of a Clerk to do the writing.<sup>7</sup>

On the same day, Congress ordered Secretary Charles Thomson to furnish Greene with a clerk, but it is not recorded that it appropriated money to pay his salary.<sup>8</sup> In 1785, as Greene prepared to move his family to Georgia, he hired Phineas Miller, a young Yale graduate, to tutor his children and transcribe the papers. Beset as he was by financial troubles, he undoubtedly had been assured by Thomson that Congress would pay part of Miller's salary. On Greene's death in June 1786, Miller had barely started the copying.

Before Catharine Greene returned to New England in 1786, she left the two trunks of papers with Greene's friend and executor, Edward Rutledge of Charleston, a distinguished lawyer and signer of the Declaration of Independence.<sup>9</sup> It was Miller's plan to spend a year with Catharine and her family in Connecticut, copying the documents, but he did not receive the two trunks from Rutledge until shortly before he was ready to return to Georgia.<sup>10</sup> Catharine kept the personal papers, taking them with her to Cumberland Island; but she returned the official papers to Rutledge's office, where they sat for twelve years. It is doubtful if Miller even touched them again; it is possible that Rutledge oversaw the copying of the three bound volumes that are now in the Library of Congress. Several of the transcriptions appear to be in Rutledge's hand. When he died in 1800 (while governor), his son Henry took the papers. They probably were in Henry's possession for some years, since he later wrote that he had had "full leisure to examine" them. Before moving to Tennessee, he placed the bulk of the official papers with his uncle, General Charles Cotesworth Pinckney, who had been his father's law partner.<sup>11</sup> Young Rutledge kept some letters (perhaps inadvertently); they showed up a century later in the hands of a descendant who was unaware "how they came into the possession of the family."<sup>12</sup>

In 1796, Catharine Greene married Phineas Miller. She died in 1814, leaving the estate on Cumberland Island and Nathanael Greene's personal papers to her youngest daughter, Louisa Shaw. In 1817, Louisa turned over the papers to Justice William Johnson of South Carolina to use in writing a biography of her father. At the same time, she asked General Pinckney to let Johnson use all of the official papers.<sup>13</sup> The status of those papers was undetermined. General Pinckney may have planned to send them to the War Department, but when he died eight years later, they were still in Johnson's possession. When Louisa pressed Johnson two years later to return the personal papers to her, he apparently responded by also sending her the official papers he had received from Pinckney.<sup>14</sup> Considering Johnson's careless handling of the documents, it is remarkable that after ten years they were relatively intact.

At some point Louisa turned over several hundred letters to her sister Cornelia. The remainder—almost six thousand—were left on her death to her nephew, Phineas Miller Nightingale, along with her estate on Cumberland Island. In 1847 his cousin, George Washington Greene, then living in New York, asked to borrow the papers with a view to publishing selections in a proposed six-volume collection of his grandfather's papers. Nightingale agreed and sent them to a lawyer in New York for inventorying. When Greene received the two trunks there were 5,597 documents, two-thirds of them original letters addressed to the general and the other third, drafts or file copies—many in his grandfather's hand.<sup>15</sup>

George Washington Greene kept the papers for many years, returning, in the meantime, to Rhode Island to live. Before he sent them back to Georgia, he showed them to the trustees of the Rhode Island Historical Society, who indicated they would be glad to have the collection—as a gift. But times were hard in postwar Georgia, and the letters constituted an asset the heirs could not afford to give away (there were forty-seven letters signed by Washington, fourteen of them written in his hand). After twenty years Nightingale's widow offered to sell them to the Rhode Island Historical Society. Professor J. Franklin Jameson of Brown University, an officer of the society, tried unsuccessfully to raise funds to purchase them.<sup>16</sup> Two years later the family sold them to Joseph Sabin, the New York autograph dealer, for $5,000. There were still more than 5,500 documents in the collection. Between 1894 and 1920, Sabin or his son sold approximately one-third of the collection at one time or another, hundreds of which have never reappeared. The remaining two thirds were kept together until they were purchased in the 1920s by William L. Clements. Today they constitute the core collection of the Greene papers at the Clements Library.<sup>17</sup>

The rest of the papers in Greene's possession at the time of his death—those given by Louisa Shaw to her sister Cornelia and consisting of several hundred items—have had a more charmed existence. Cornelia bequeathed them to her son Peyton Skipwith of Oxford, Mississippi, who some time before the Civil War lent them to his cousin, George Washington Greene, in Rhode Island. Some years later they were en route back to Skipwith when the vessel carrying them was wrecked off the Carolina coast. They were retrieved by a gunboat and eventually found their way back to Mississippi. All were water-damaged, some severely. In 1920 they made a final passage to a safe resting place in the Library of Congress.<sup>18</sup> Fortunately, some of the most severely damaged letters had been copied by Greene before he shipped them back.

We have mentioned one other set of papers that were once part of General Greene's files—the so-called quartermaster papers that he left in 1780 with his deputy, Charles Pettit. When Pettit left the Quartermaster Department a year later, he apparently took the papers with him. After his death in 1806, according to William Johnson, they were sold as wastepaper and retrieved by Robert DeSilver, a Philadelphia publisher, who made them available to Dr. Charles Caldwell for a biography of Greene that was subsequently (1819) published by DeSilver.<sup>19</sup> The following year, some thirteen hundred items of DeSilver's collection were given to the American Philosophical Society, where they have been cared for ever since.

In 1835 the State Department acquired the rest of Greene's quartermaster papers that had been found, according to DeSilver, "in an old Barrel of rubbish and arranged and bound by him (DeSilver)."<sup>20</sup> Whether they were the letters Johnson speaks of as being sold for wastepaper cannot be ascertained.

EDITORIAL METHOD

Arrangement of Material

Letters and documents are arranged chronologically. If two or more related items are dated the same day, they are arranged in sequence; if unrelated to each other, they are arranged as follows:

1. Military orders and documents (as opposed to letters)
2. Letters from NG (Nathanael Greene), alphabetically by recipient
3. Letters to NG, alphabetically by sender.

Undated Items

If a date omitted by the writer can be determined, it is typed in brackets, and the item takes its place chronologically. A doubtful conjecture is followed by a question mark.

If a precise day cannot be established, the shortest conjecturable time span is placed in brackets and the item arranged as follows:

Conjectured Time Span	Chronological Arrangement
[10-18] September 1776	Placed at 10 September 1776
[April] 1776	Placed at end of April 1776
[November 1775-February 1776]	Placed at end of November 1775
[1775]	Placed at end of 1775
[1776-78]	Placed at end of 1776
[before 12 December 1776]	Placed at end of 11 December documents

All such conjectures are explained in footnotes. If no time period can be conjectured, the item will be placed at the end of the last part of the microfilm edition.

Misdated Items

If the correct date can be determined for a misdated item, it follows the incorrect date in brackets; if a date is suspected of being incorrect, a question mark in brackets follows.

Form of a Letter

The form of a letter is rendered as follows, regardless of the original:

1. Place and date is at top right.
2. Complimentary close is set continuously with the body.
3. Paragraphs are indented, and paragraphing is sometimes introduced to relieve long, unbroken segments.

4. Author's interlineations or brief additions in the margin are incorporated into the text silently unless of unusual significance, when they are explained in a footnote.
5. Scored-out or erased passages are ignored unless mentioned in a footnote.
6. Address sheet and docketing are normally omitted.

MANUSCRIPT TEXTUAL POLICY

Following the practice established by Julian Boyd, Leonard Labaree, and other modern editors, manuscripts are rendered in such a way as to be intelligible to the present-day reader while retaining as much as possible the essential form and spirit of the writer. The following guidelines reflect this compromise.

Spelling

Spelling is retained as written. If a misspelled word or name is not readily recognizable, the correct spelling follows in brackets. Names are correctly spelled in notes and index.

Inadvertent repetition of words is corrected silently.

Capitalization

The only instance in which an author's capitalization is always followed is the eighteenth-century practice of capitalizing words within sentences—usually, but not confined to, nouns. In other cases, an author's capitalization is changed where necessary to conform to the following rules:

1. All sentences begin with initial capitals.
2. Personal names and titles used with them, honorifics (such as "His Excellency"), geographical names, and days of the week and months are capitalized.

Abbreviations and Contractions

1. Shortened word forms still in use or those that can easily be understood (as "t'was" or "twixt") are rendered as written.
2. Those no longer readily understood are treated thus: "cmsy [commissary]" or "warr[an]t."
3. Abbreviations of names or places—forms known only to the correspondents or their contemporaries—are also expanded in brackets, as in S[amuel] A[dams] or Chsn [Charleston].

Symbols Representing Letters and Words

When any of the following symbols are expanded, they are done so silently:

1. The ampersand is expanded to "and" except in "&c," "&ca.," and "& Co." in business firms.

2. The thorn, which by 1750 had been debased to "y" as in "ye," is expanded to "th." Such abbreviations as "ye" "y" or "y<sup>m</sup>" are rendered as "the," "that," or "them."
3. The macron is replaced by the letter(s) it represents—as in cōmission or haḡen.
4. The ꝥ sign is expanded to the appropriate letters it represents (e.g., per, pre, or pro).
5. Superscript letters are brought down to the line as in 9th to 9th or Reg<sup>t</sup> to Regt.

Punctuation

Where necessary, punctuation is changed to conform to the following rules:

1. A period or question mark is placed at the end of every sentence.
2. Within a sentence, punctuation is sparingly added or deleted in order to clarify a confusing or misleading passage.
3. Dashes used in place of commas, semicolons, periods, or question marks are replaced with appropriate punctuation; dashes are retained when used to mark a suspension of the sense or to set off a change of thought.
4. No punctuation is used after a salutation.

Missing or Indecipherable Passages

If such passages cannot be conjectured, they are indicated by italicized editorial comments in brackets, such as [mutilated], [indecipherable], [remainder of paragraph (or letter) missing], [several words missing].

If missing or indecipherable portions can be conjectured, they are treated in one of the following ways:

1. Any missing letters that are conjectured are inserted in brackets. If there is some doubt about the conjecture, it is followed by a question mark: Ch[arleston?].
2. If such portions can be supplied from a variant version of the manuscript, they are set in angle brackets: <Washington>.
3. A blank left by the author is so depicted.

PRINTED MATERIAL

In reprinting documents from printed sources the capitalization, spelling, punctuation, and paragraphing have been faithfully followed—except for obvious printer's errors.

The earlier practice of italicizing names, however, is dropped, as is the italicization of passages by the former editor.

SOURCE NOTE

An unnumbered source note directly follows each document. For manuscript material, it consists of a symbol describing the type of manuscript, followed by the symbol or name of the repository that owns the document, or the name of an individual owner.

Pertinent facts or conjectures concerning the manuscript are added when required. A list of manuscript symbols and a list of the Library of Congress repository symbols follow.

ARTILLERY PARK	An encampment for artillery.
ARTILLERY TRAIN	An army's collection of cannon and the material for firing them.
BARBETTE	A platform or mound of earth for artillery, usually separated from a main fortification.
BASTION	An outward projection of a fort enabling gunners to fire along the wall of the fort at an enemy.
BATEAU	A light, flat-bottomed river craft with raked bow and stern.
BATTALION	See Regiment.
BOMB, BOOMBE	A powder-filled iron sphere that is fired from a mortar and fused to explode after falling.
BREASTWORK	An improvised fortification, usually consisting of a trench and earthen barrier.
BRIGADE	A formation of two or more regiments.
BROADSIDE	The firing of all artillery on one side of a warship.
CANISTER	A tin cylinder containing metal balls that scattered when fired from a cannon.
CARCASS	An incendiary device fired from a cannon at wooden structures or ships.
CARTOUCHE	Cartridge made of a paper cylinder, containing powder and lead ball.
CHANDELIER	Wooden frame filled with fascines, for protection where earth could not be dug.
CHEVAL-DE-FRISE	Used usually in the plural; a portable defense barrier bristling with long, iron-tipped wooden spikes. An underwater version consisted of a rock-filled wooden frame, on which sharpened timbers were set at an angle to rip the hull of a vessel.
COLOURMAN	Traditionally, a soldier who assisted in preparing a new camp site; also, often used for one who was responsible for disagreeable cleaning and sanitation tasks.
DIVISION	A unit of two or more brigades.
DRAGOON	Once a mounted infantryman, by 1775 the term was used interchangeably with cavalryman.
DURHAM BOAT	A shallow-drafted boat developed to transport iron ore. Varying in length from forty to sixty feet and around eight feet in width, it could carry a company of troops and was usually poled.
EMBRASURE	An opening through which cannon were fired.

ENFILADE	To sweep with gunfire along a line of works or troops from end to end.
FASCINE	A firmly tied bundle of wooden sticks or small limbs.
FATIGUE	Manual and menial duty performed by troops.
FIREBOAT	A vessel filled with a variety of combustibles for burning enemy vessels.

PICKET, PICQUET	An outguard to warn of an enemy approach.
PIKE	Wooden spear of varying length, with a steel point.
PIONEERS	Men responsible for digging trenches, repairing roads, preparing fortifications, etc.
PLATFORM	A wooden bed upon which a cannon was placed.
PRIVATEER	A privately owned armed vessel commissioned to take enemy merchantmen as prizes.

REGIMENT	During this period, regiment and battalion were used interchangeably. Usually composed of eight companies and at full strength numbering from 520 to 780.
REKETMENT	A wall to retain an earthen rampart or side of a ditch.
ROW GALLEY	A low, flat vessel with one deck, varying in length up to 130 feet; manned by oarsmen and carrying several small cannon.
SCHOONER	A small fore-and-aft-rigged vessel with two masts.
SCOW	A flat-bottomed boat with square ends.
SHIP	A large vessel with three masts, each composed of a lower mast, topmast, and topgallant mast.
SLOOP	Small, one-masted vessel.
SNOW	Generally, a two-masted vessel with small mast behind the mainmast.
SUBALTERN	Commissioned officer below the rank of lieutenant.
SUTLER	A provisioner for an army camp who operates for profit.
TRANSPORT	A vessel for carrying troops.
XEBEQUE	A three-masted ship with long, overhanging bow and stern, which originated in the Mediterranean.
