Introduction

The American Civil Liberties Union Archives document the activities of the Union in protect-ing individual rights from 1920 through 1995. The files contain materials on freedom of speech, expression, and association; due process of law; equality before the law; legal case files; and organizational records. Within these categories files reflect subject areas such as academic freedom, censorship, racial discrimination, aliens' rights, privacy concerns, labor concerns, amnesty, and government loyalty and security. The files reflect work on litigation, advocacy and public policy, and various areas of interest connected with civil liberties. Materials include correspondence, court documents, memoranda, printed matter, minutes, reports, briefs, and legal files. Also included are materials from ACLU affiliate organizations, and the Lawyers Constitutional Defense Committee.

The records also document the ACLU's predecessor organization, the National Civil Liberties Bureau (1917-1920) of the American Union Against Militarism.

Size

1917-1950, 1886 bound volumes and 12 archival boxes (on 288 reels of microfilm)

1917-1995, 899.37 linear feet (2004 archival boxes, 20 half-size archival boxes, 21 archival shoeboxes, 20 16x20 photo boxes, 11 8x10 photo boxes, 9 film canisters, and 1 24x36 photo box)

Processed 1994-1996 by Paula Jabloner with the assistance of Assistant Archivist for Technical Services Daniel Linke, Special Collections Assistants Amy Escott, Claire Johnston, Alison McCuaig, and Tom Rosko, and students Laurie Alexander, Christina Aragon, Laura Burt, Jue Chen, Clement Doyle, Joe Faber, Said Farah, Boyd Goodson, Naomi Harlin, Janet Hine, Matthew Honahan, Katherine Johnson, Damian Long, Theresa Marchitto, Laura Myones, Olivia Kew, Grace Koo, Dan Sack, Bijan Salehizadeh, Tina Wang, Kyle Weston, and Elizabeth Williamson.

The processing was made possible by the generous support from the National Historic Publications and Records Commission and the John Foster and Janet Avery Dulles Fund.

Historical Note

The American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) was established in 1920 to protect the specific constitutional freedoms in the Bill of Rights. In 1915 the American Union Against Militarism (AUAM) was formed to prevent United States involvement in World War I, with Crystal Eastman serving as executive secretary. Roger Baldwin became executive director in 1917. Immediately upon the United States's entry in World War I, the AUAM was inundated with requests for aid to protect free speech, assembly and press which were threatened with political restriction, and to defend the rights of conscientious objectors. A separate organization was needed to safeguard these rights, and thus the National Civil Liberties Bureau (NCLB) was established in the autumn of 1917 with Roger Baldwin as director.

For the history of the ACLU during the Baldwin years, see the history in the ACLU finding aid, 1912-1950, which may be viewed in electronic form at <http://infoshare.l.princeton.edu/libraries/firestone/rbsc/finding-aids/aclu1920/index.html>. This is also a Scholarly Resources publication and should be identified as such.

The ACLU, 1950-1995: The Trials of Growth

The forty years between 1950 and 1990 were a time of significant growth for the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU). Membership increased twenty-five times, and the Union's impact on the legal landscape was broad and deep. One historian decreed that the decade after 1954 witnessed "the greatest advances in civil liberties in American history," with significant gains for African Americans, women, students, the mentally-ill, prisoners, and others previously denied the full protection afforded by the U.S. Constitution. This period also saw the end to much censorship and the decoupling of church/state activity. The ACLU's boom was not without the threat of bust, however. The organization restructured itself several times as it wrestled to reflect internally the principles it espoused publicly. Its expansion into new areas of civil rights along with its firm stand on the First Amendment produced episodes that threatened the ACLU's viability.

Organizational Expansion

In the years immediately following World War II, younger, non-founding members of the ACLU Board pressed for and eventually achieved a structural reorganization that led to the Union's present configuration. In 1950, Roger Baldwin's role changed from administrator to ambassador, in which he toured, lectured, and wrote on civil liberties issues. While at the helm of the ACLU, Baldwin preferred that the ACLU remain a small, centrally-controlled unit with himself at the helm, something that changed under the administration of his successor, Patrick Murphy Malin. A Swarthmore economist, Malin lacked Baldwin's charm and speaking skills, but he was a successful administrator who oversaw the growth of the organization from 9,000 members in 1950 to over 60,000 by the time of his departure in 1962. Much of this growth can be attributed to the expansion of local affiliates at the state and regional levels that had their own boards and acted upon local civil liberties issues. Many served as watchdogs—ensuring that civil rights victories won by the national ACLU in the high courts were enforced at the local level—while other affiliates were active in initiating cases, often with more absolutist positions than the national office. Though the affiliates had a voice in deciding the national chapter's direction and policy since 1954, the organizational mechanism by which this was accomplished was cumbersome, changing several times. A workable method was found in 1967 with the creation of an 80-member board of directors comprised of representatives from all the affiliates and thirty at-large members. In addition, starting in 1959 and continuing to the present, the ACLU held biennial conferences to inform membership on pertinent topics, and to gather their views on civil liberties issues.

The Cold War and Civil Liberties

Historian Samuel Walker divides the ACLU's area of activity between 1950-1990 into four broad areas: Cold War issues, censorship, church/state, and civil rights. The beginning of the Cold War, the rise of Joseph McCarthy and the re-emergence of the House Committee on Un-American Activities (HUAC) created an atmosphere of intolerance and suspicion that not only posed a threat to individual civil liberties, but also destroyed the lives of many caught in the web spun by the Wisconsin Senator and his minions. The ACLU challenged the actions of McCarthy and HUAC on the tenet that only peoples' acts, not their beliefs, should be penalized; anything less infringed on First Amendment principle.

While the ACLU had not always lived up to these same principles (in 1940 it ousted board member Elizabeth Gurley Flynn for her membership in the Communist Party), by the early 1950s the ACLU did not hesitate to aid in the publication of Merle Miller's The Judges and the Judged. The book detailed HUAC's and McCarthy's red-baiting tactics, such as the prevalent use of unnamed (and hence unreliable or unanswerable) sources, guilt by association or exercise of one's Fifth Amendment rights, and other questionable means that resulted in blacklistings and firings of many in unions, the film industry, and the teaching profession. The ACLU called for the abolition of HUAC, attacked any measure that punished Communist Party members or denied them rights based solely on party membership (Kent v. Dulles, for example), and sought fair and open investigations for the accused. In testament to its strict adherence to principle, the ACLU reminded the United States Senate of its obligation to provide McCarthy a fair hearing when it began censure proceedings against him in 1954.

The ACLU may have stood up for the rights of the accused more readily in 1950 than it did in 1940 because Roger Baldwin had developed a quid pro quo with J. Edgar Hoover in which the ACLU did not publicize FBI civil rights violations, and high-level Union officers cooperated with the Bureau. Baldwin and others thought that this cooperation, in conjunction with the Flynn resolution, inoculated the Union against attack as a Communist-front organization, freeing it to spend its energies defending constitutional principle, not itself. This arrangement, shocking when revealed in later years, did not prevent the FBI from continuing its massive surveillance of the ACLU and its members.

Red hunters cited national security as the basis for their actions, a justification that the government would continue to invoke and one that the ACLU contested in such cases as the Pentagon Papers (U.S. v. New York Times), Watergate (U.S. v. Nixon), and Iran-Contra. In 1969, 13 years after Joseph McCarthy's death, the ACLU's vigilance bore the ultimate fruit in Brandenburg v. Ohio in which the Supreme Court ruled that the government only could punish direct incitement to lawless action, thereby invalidating the Smith Act and all state sedition laws that restricted radical political thought.

Censorship and Freedom of Speech

The cousin to McCarthyism's national security cause was the drive to protect people from printed materials and movies that promoted Communism or were perceived to erode community morals. Censorship attempts were, from the ACLU's point of view, a fundamental attack on free speech, and over the course of three decades, the Union came to adopt an absolutist position, suffering no infringement in any form. Beginning with a 1952 Supreme Court victory in Burstyn v. Wilson/McCaffrey in which the high court declared that states cannot prohibit the screening of films based on state-based standards, the ACLU rang up a string of court victories. These, combined with changing market pressures, brought a complete end to many common censorship practices by the 1960s (Jacobellis v. Ohio), including the sharp curtailment of post office censorship (Hannegan v. Esquire).

In a related decision, the Supreme Court gave a boost to freedom of the press in New York Times v. Sullivan which declared that public officials could not sue for defamation unless they proved "actual malice," thereby providing the media with heretofore unknown freedom to report critically. Freedom of speech was extended, with the ACLU's assistance, by placing it above property rights in Pruneyard Shopping Center v. Robins, with the high court deciding that a shopping center could not forbid the distribution of political pamphlets on its premises.

Perhaps the most famous free speech issue of the ACLU's history, and certainly one that had the greatest impact on the organization, was the pitched battle over American Nazis' right to parade through Skokie, Illinois in 1977. Half the town's 70,000 citizens were Jewish, and about 1,000 were Holocaust survivors, but this did not dissuade the ACLU (then headed by Aryeh Neier who was Jewish) from taking on the Nazis' cause in what the ACLU considered a "classic First Amendment case."

What the Union did not count on was a vigorous counter-argument by the Jewish Defense League, nor the loss of the support of its long-time ally, the American Jewish Congress. The ACLU won the court case, though the Nazis never marched in Skokie (ultimately parading at a site in downtown Chicago), but the highly-publicized case caused a backlash resulting in a large drop in membership. Neier, who had assumed the executive director's post after the departure of John de J. Pemberton in 1970 and was accustomed to growing membership rolls and increasing budgets, found himself unable to reconcile the organization's activities with available funds and resigned. His successor, Ira Glasser, initiated an emergency appeal to supporters and raised over $500,000, allowing him to restructure organizationally and financially, placing the ACLU back in the black and ready for the looming trials of the Reagan Revolution.

Church/State

The ACLU earned the enmity of many for its efforts in enforcing the separation of church and state. Working to end state-sanctioned forms of religion, predominantly mainstream Protestantism, the ACLU sought to abolish school prayer, various government subsidies for religious education, and other connections between government and religious activity. Starting in 1947 with Everson v. Board of Education, the court delineated the Establishment Clause and the ACLU began to challenge long-entrenched government support for religious activity. Assailing school prayer, the ACLU won high court decisions to end it (Engel v. Vitale and Abington School District v. Schempp). It also re-fought the Scopes trial (Epperson v. Arkansas) in Arkansas which had required the teaching of creationism as well as evolution.

Frequently working in conjunction with Protestants United for the Separation of Church and State (later Americans United...) and the American Jewish Congress, the ACLU repeatedly clashed with the desires of the Roman Catholic Church on issues such as censorship, birth control, or school aid, often with the ACLU the victor. By the late 1960s, changes in public attitude toward church/state issues cemented the organization's gains, as many mainstream churches accepted the delineation. However, fundamentalist religions continued challenging laws on public prayer issues into the 1990s, with little effect (Wallace v. Jaffree). Often, the affiliates bore the brunt of enforcement on church/state separation, acting to check sometimes frequent local infringements, thus proving Roger Baldwin's assertion that "no victory ever stays won."

Civil Rights

The First Amendment clearly delineates free speech protection and church/state separation, and it was easy for the ACLU to pick up the banner for these causes. However, most of the ACLU's work from the 1950s onward involved the more ambiguous and complex realm of civil rights, helping secure the rights or expanding the concept of those same rights for those who had been denied them in the past, such as African-Americans, women, homosexuals, children, the mentally-ill, prisoners, and the accused. In this multifaceted arena, the ACLU found itself embroiled both internally and externally, as the national organization sought to define its mission even as state affiliates and regional offices acted on their own accord, usually pushing further and harder than the national organization planned to go.

For example, during the Vietnam War ACLU moderates clashed with anti-war activists over the issue of representing Dr. Benjamin Spock, the famous pediatrician and prominent anti-war activist accused of interfering with the functions of government when he organized a “Stop the Draft” Week in 1968. Legal director Melvin Wulf first announced that the ACLU would represent Spock, only to be overruled by the national board, prompting the Massachusetts affiliate to take up Spock’s cause. Though ultimately the government would drop its case, pro-Spock members saw the case as an opportunity to raise questions about the Vietnam War’s legitimacy (as well as freedom of speech), while moderates viewed that issue as outside the ACLU’s scope. It also brought to the fore a long-simmering debate over whether the ACLU should participate directly in lawsuits or contribute amicus curiae (“friend of the court”) briefs to other cases. After reviewing its most recent past activity, the Union decided that they had de facto become directly involved in cases and would continue as such.

Despite the organizational turmoil, a discussion of the ACLU’s legal success under the civil rights rubric threatens to become a numbing list of historic Supreme Court decisions. Brown v. Board of Education, which overturned Plessy v. Ferguson and tolled the end of government-endorsed segregation, was one of many cases in which the ACLU worked together with the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) to win rights for African Americans. The ACLU participated in all the major civil rights cases, arguing for freedom of speech and association rights that allowed the sit-ins, freedom rides, and other methods employed by the movement.

Other famous high court cases in which the ACLU partook include: Griswold v. Connecticut, which recognized a right to privacy, thereby laying the foundation for future abortion rights decisions; Tinker v. Des Moines and In re Gault, two cases recognizing that minors enjoyed some Constitutional protection, especially in regard to freedom of speech and due process; and Miranda v. Arizona, Mapp v. Ohio, Escobedo v. Illinois, and Gideon v. Wainwright, all of which expanded the rights of the accused, mandating an explanation of their rights and access to counsel, and placing limits on police action. (While these last cases caused many police groups to view the ACLU with hostility, the Union also defended a police officer’s right to belong to conservative political organizations such as the John Birch Society.)

As the concept of civil rights expanded, the ACLU started several special projects designed to focus solely on specific topics, including the Mental Health Law Project, the Project on Amnesty, the Privacy Project, the Women’s Rights Project, the Lesbian and Gay Rights Project, and Prisoners’ Rights Project. Each project worked not only to change the law, but also to educate the public and raise their own funds.

Expansion Issues

The Children’s Rights Project is an example of how the ACLU changed itself from a small, centrally-controlled organization to an expansive confederacy of groups working to advance the goal of civil liberties. With its roots in the 1970s and located at the national organization’s office in New York City, the Children's Rights Project was one of the focused projects financially seeded by the national organization. In 1995, it had become successful enough to incorporate itself and separate from the ACLU organizationally, physically, and financially. Another sign of growth was the start of the regional offices. In addition to the Washington, D.C. office (established 1938), the Southern Regional Office in Atlanta was organized in 1964 and the Mountain States Regional Office in Denver a few years later. Each handled cases particular to their geographic areas, as well as the usual range of cases that interested the ACLU. This led to varying interpretations of ACLU policy which resulted in the creation of the ACLU's official policy guides, issued first in 1966 and revised periodically. These represented the ACLU's attempt to coordinate and control the types of cases the Union would take on and to shepherd resources along coordinated lines.

Unfortunately, the national organization had trouble determining what path to take, as many individuals within the organization pulled in different directions. Exacerbating this problem was the ACLU's restructuring which attempted to reconcile the many voices in the civil liberties debate. After the first reorganization, which opened up policy making to affiliates in 1954, the ACLU reorganized again in 1964, establishing a two-tiered system of governance in which affiliate representatives met twice a year and the board of directors in between. The dichotomy did not provide any stability, and three years later, the Union reorganized once again, establishing its one-body 80-member board. Throughout this time, the ACLU continued its board committees—some standing, others ad hoc—which focused on particular issues such as academic freedom or due process. In later years, the rise of the special projects would overtake some of the committees' work, and the role of the committees would be reduced, though not eliminated.

The establishment of the Roger N. Baldwin/ACLU Foundation in 1967 was another major organizational change for the ACLU. The Union created the charitable fund-raising arm to pay attorneys to work on the ACLU's behalf, signalling the end of the national organization's long-standing reliance on volunteer lawyers. Though volunteer attorneys continued to play a significant role in many of the affiliates, even there some groups, such as the New York and Southern California affiliates, had a history of paying for legal representation. The Foundation's purpose was to solicit funds from, among other places, other foundations, and during its early years much of its resources supported civil rights work in the South. In later years, it would provide initial funds for many of the special projects, gather any legal fees won by the project lawyers, and apply the funds against the project's overhead costs.

These changes reflected not only the organization's growth, but also its expanding interpretation of what constituted civil liberties work. Starting with the civil rights movement and continuing on through the Vietnam War and Watergate, the ACLU fought internally, often bitterly, over the scope and nature of its work. In this battle, the broad interpreters of the Union's mission won out, as the organization took on cases involving abortion rights, women's rights, affirmative action, and other areas, far from the basic principle of protecting First Amendment rights on which the Union was founded.

The 1980s and early 1990s

The ACLU emerged from the 1970s a victor of many legal battles and organizationally strong. However, despite its track record and strength, the ACLU would not ring up a string of Supreme Court victories in the 1980s and 1990s as it had in the previous two decades. Public sentiment, long an ally in many areas, had shifted against the organization, to the point that ACLU membership was identified as out-of-the-mainstream. In the 1988 presidential election, GOP candidate George Bush, willfully unaware of nearly fifty years of Supreme Court decisions, echoed the phrase of Joseph McCarthy in calling his opponent, Michael Dukakis, a “card-carrying member of the ACLU” for his opposition to a flag-salute requirement. The Bush accusation reflected the state of public awareness of civil liberties in the 1980s as the ACLU refought a number of battles over such issues as censorship, school prayer, creationism, and abortion rights. In the area of censorship, the Union withstood challenges from both right and left, the latter trying to censor publications under the rubric of protecting women. However, the ACLU stood firm in its belief in the absolute freedom of speech.

The U.S. Constitution was written to guarantee that the rights of the minority would not be infringed upon by the majority; the ACLU’s accomplishments during the twentieth century helped to ensure that unpopular views would be tolerated, and indirectly, to remind people that it is an uncommon nation that commonly tolerates challenges to the majority.

Series Description

The subject files consist of records gathered by the ACLU on various topics of interest pertaining to its mission. The records here are divided into four broad categories: Freedom of Belief, Expression, and Association; Due Process of Law; Equality Before the Law; and International Civil Liberties. Except for International Civil Liberties, each is then further subdivided alphabetically by topic. There is also a body of miscellaneous material at the end of the series. Generally, the subject files contain background material on a topic, as well as correspondence, memoranda, and other items documenting the ACLU’s involvement with the issue.

Series 3, Subject Files: Freedom of Belief, Expression, and Association

Miscellaneous, 1950-1979 [Boxes 704-721]

This subseries (7.56 l.f.) consists of cases and legislation monitored by the ACLU, as well as correspondence, relevant documentation, and newspaper clippings. These cases and legislative issues relate primarily to the first amendment right of free speech; however they occasionally involve the right to freedom of association, freedom of belief, and some issues regarding due process of law in relation to these rights. The ACLU had no direct involvement in these cases but they raised First Amendment issues of interest to the ACLU.

The majority of the files are concerned with two major issues during this period: the right of demonstrators to protest U.S. involvement in the Vietnam War, and the right of right-wing groups to congregate freely in public and express views. The remainder of the files generally deal with attempts at suppression that came from the backlash against the anti-war subcultures growing in the U.S. in response to the war. Many of the files in this subseries overlap with the other files under Freedom of Belief, Expression, and Association, especially the Assembly and Public Protest subseries. The files are arranged by year and then alphabetically.

Academic Freedom, 1947-1985 [bulk 1947-1973] [Boxes 722-747]

The Academic Freedom subseries (10.92 l.f.) contains numerous documents relating to the rights of teachers to instruct according to personal conviction and the right of students to learn and inquire fully without fear of hindrance or other reprisals. The subseries is arranged chronologically and alphabetically within each year using consistent headings throughout. Headings include miscellaneous academic freedom issues, campus unrest, cases, communists, education, legislation, loyalty oaths, students, and teachers. The files contain examples of both collegiate and secondary school violations of educational freedom. The case files are reference files, most representative of the issues considered noteworthy by the Academic Freedom Committee of the ACLU. Materials are primarily composed of correspondence, memoranda, internal reports, and newspaper clippings.

From approximately 1947 through 1962, the majority of files relate to the questionable dismissal of professors for "Communist" views or for refusing to take loyalty oaths. Furthermore, several files from this era chronicle the violation of civil liberties experienced by various student political organizations. From 1967 through 1973, the files contain many examples of campus unrest and civil liberties violations related to the Vietnam War.

For additional material on academic freedom, please refer to the Assistant Director Dorothy D. Bromley Records, the Academic Freedom Committee materials, and the Academic Freedom Committee minutes in Series 1, Organizational Matters.

Access to Government Information, 1951-1977 [Boxes 748-749]

This subseries (0.82 l.f.) documents the ACLU's involvement in the ongoing struggle to make and keep government information open to the public. These efforts culminated in freedom of information legislation in the 1960s and 1970s. Among the topics addressed in the ACLU documents are executive privilege, the role of the United States Information Agency, the Warren Commission's proceedings, and the potential for abuse of census data. Of particular help in understanding the ACLU's policy is the 1965 Hendel report.

The subseries is organized chronologically under the headings general access, academic access, press access, public access, and legislation. The materials include reports, clippings, news releases, correspondence, and memoranda.

Assembly and Public Protest, 1949-1984 [Boxes 750-754]

The Assembly and Public Protest (2.2 l.f.) subseries documents the ACLU's involvement with issues such as banning of meetings, demonstrations, distribution of literature, loitering, picketing, and protest. Forms of materials included are reports, newspaper clippings, correspondence, news releases, and court documents. The documents have been divided under various headings including: assembly, bans, cases, demonstrations, Peekskill riots, and protest.

The Peekskill, New York riots involved political, racial and religious conflicts, touched off by two Paul Robeson concerts in 1949. The documentation of these riots stresses the importance of protecting the right to assemble regardless of a group's popularity and documents the event's civil liberties abuses.

The ACLU often was involved in cases supporting the rights of unpopular groups to use public facilities to express their views. Many of the groups that inspired public protest were involved with such activities as Communism, socialism, or white supremacy. Areas of concern documented in the 1970s include handguns and the Nazi march in Skokie, Illinois. This subseries portrays the role the ACLU played in order to maintain the legal right of all groups and individuals to assemble and protest.

Censorship, 1939-1989 [bulk 1947-1973] [Boxes 755-797]

The ACLU censorship files (18.06 l.f.) contain materials which reflect the ACLU's involvement and interest in guaranteeing that freedom of speech and the press are not abridged. The ACLU fought hard against Post Office censorship, pressure groups, and government to protect the rights of artists, nudists, movie makers, homosexuals, and others to express their views, ideas, and images in books, magazines, and movies. These files are the documentation of that struggle.

This subseries is arranged chronologically by year and alphabetically under consistent headings within each year; however, each heading may not be represented every year. The headings found include: books, comic books, cases, customs bureau, federal government, libel, library, movies and theater, military, newspapers and magazines, obscenity, post office, and pressure groups. These files contain correspondence, memoranda, newspaper clippings, printed materials, reports, statements, court documents, legislation, and in earlier years, the actual printed materials that were censored.

During the 1940s and 1950s censorship issues primarily concerned Communist or "un-American" content and obscenity. Interracial situations presented in movies or literature were also subject to censorship. From 1947 through the late 1960s the Post Office played a major role in censorship by banning, withholding, and/or destroying "questionable" materials that were being sent through the mail. One of the largest cases concerning Post Office censorship was the Sunshine and Health case. The dispute over this nudist magazine began in 1950 and went on for eight years.

Various pressure groups and the government played important roles in censoring materials. While organizations like Citizens for Decent Literature and the National Organization for Decent Literature primarily targeted books and newsstands, minority groups tried to censor movies and books that portrayed their group in a negative light. Patriotic organizations like the American Legion were very active in attempting to censor various types of materials. In addition, the government undertook various anti-obscenity measures.

Researchers should also consult the Mass Communications subseries for materials pertaining to freedom of the press and libel issues, and National Coalition Against Censorship minutes in the Board Committees subseries.

Church and State, 1947-1986 [Boxes 798-821]

This subseries (10.08 l.f.) documents the ACLU's involvement in litigation and public education issues relating to the separation of church and state and religious freedom.

The various forms of materials in the subseries include: ACLU policy statements, press releases, memoranda, government documents, clippings, legal briefs, conference proceedings, and correspondence. The files are grouped under headings including: cases, child custody, education, Jehovah's Witnesses, public funds, public schools, released time, religious displays, religious freedom, Sunday blue laws, and transportation.

The Church and State subseries contains materials relating to a wide range of issues: federal aid to non-public or parochial schools; Bible readings and prayers in public schools; tax exemptions for sectarian schools; "released time" programs to attend religious schools; "shared time" arrangements between public and parochial schools; proposed prayer amendments to the Constitution; and religious liberties for Jehovah's Witnesses, Seventh-Day Adventists, Muslims, and other religious groups.

Some of the issues covered in the files of the 1950s and 1960s include: Amish education, Sunday blue laws, Christmas stamps, religious displays on public property, the appointment of a United States ambassador to the Vatican, the Regent's Prayer case in New York state (1962), construction grants to religiously-affiliated colleges (Horace Mann League, et al. v. Tawes et al., 1963). There are materials relating to landmark decisions of Supreme Court cases which include McCollum v. Board of Education (1948), Zorach v. Clauson (1952), Engel v. Vitale (1962), and Abington v. Schempp and Murray v. Curlett (1963). In 1955, there are three files relating to the trial of John T. Scopes in Tennessee, marking the 30th anniversary of the Scopes trial and the ACLU's attempt to challenge the Tennessee "anti-evolution" law.

During the 1970s, a major area of concern for the ACLU in church/state policy was the granting of public funds and federal tax credits to parochial and private schools. Other issues contained in the files include demilitarization of the chaplaincy (1973-1974), religious "deprogramming" (1973-1977), and the Boy Scouts of America and their requirement in expression of belief in a Supreme Being (1976). The ACLU, along with other organizations, founded the National Coalition for Public Education and Religious Liberty (PEARL) in 1973 to organize their activities in opposition to government aid to non-public schools.

The papers of Dorothy Dunbar Bromley, ACLU assistant director and executive officer of the Church-State Committee from 1960 to 1962, are located in the Dorothy Dunbar Bromley subseries.

Deprogramming, 1975-1977 [Boxes 821A & 821B]

The Deprogramming subseries (0.84 l.f.) deals with reactions to religious cults and brainwashing and the organized and unorganized attempts by parents and others to "deprogram" or undo the effects of the cults on their members. Deprogramming usually consisted of "kidnapping" members of the religious cults (typically by family members) and then employing various methods to counteract the cult's philosophy which often had been ingrained into members using coercive means. It was this perceived infringement of freedom of thought which led to the involvement of the ACLU.

This subseries contains material regarding Hare Krishnas, Scientology, the Unification Church (headed by Reverend Sung Myung Moon), and mainstream religions. It also contains information on practitioners of deprogramming including Ted Patrick and the Freedom of Thought Foundation. The subseries is arranged alphabetically by subject and consists of correspondence, clippings, statements and some case file material including briefs, pleadings, and testimony.

Environment and Civil Liberties, 1970-1978 [Box 822]

This subseries (0.21 l.f.) details the ACLU's internal debate over whether environmental hazards should be part of the ACLU's civil liberties mission. Together with correspondence between various branches of the ACLU, the collection contains outside papers, reports, and letters used in the ACLU's examination of environmental topics. Issues mentioned include alternative energy sources, plutonium recycling, and the dangers of nuclear energy. The majority of the documents in the collection suggest that the ACLU did not generally consider environmental issues to be within the scope of its efforts.

Freedom of Movement, 1942-1978 [bulk 1947-1964] [Boxes 823-843]

The Freedom of Movement subseries (8.82 l.f.) contains materials relating to issues of immigration, naturalization, travel within and outside the United States, and deportation. Individual cases, general policy, and legal questions are addressed.

The subseries consists of correspondence, court briefs, memoranda, printed materials, clippings, speeches, and legislation. They are organized chronologically and alphabetically within each year under five general headings: miscellaneous, deportation, immigration, naturalization, and passport. The deportation heading contains materials involving any sort of detention related to immigration issues. The immigration files contain both individual visa cases and materials relating to broader questions of immigration, including the debate over quotas. The naturalization material refers to both naturalization and denaturalization cases and issues affecting naturalized citizens. The passport heading includes all materials pertaining to the restriction of the travel of U.S. citizens abroad. A “miscellaneous” folder is generally included under each heading and often contains important documents pertaining to general issues and ACLU policy.

Among the issues addressed are the right of the government to request information about political views or involvement and to deny immigration, naturalization, or passport rights based on this information; the nature of loyalty oaths; the rights of naturalized citizens; and the right to travel to Communist countries. During the 1950s, the issue of the rights of Communists was significant, and a great deal of material from this time relates to the McCarran Act of 1950 and subsequent legislation placing restrictions on American and foreign Communists. Of particular importance during the early 1960s was the “Travel to Cuba” movement, and all cases pertaining to this movement have been grouped together within the Passport heading.

Labor and Business, 1937-1978 [bulk 1949-1960] [Boxes 844-855]

This subseries (5.04 l.f.) contains various legal, administrative, and correspondence files relating to the ACLU’s involvement in the protection of union and employee rights. The records also contain newspaper clippings and reprints of ACLU-published documents relating to labor unions and business practices.

The bulk of the material is from the 1950s, a time of active union unrest and tense labor politics. Many of the files from this time refer to the Taft-Hartley Act of 1947. Also known as the Labor/Management Relations Act, this legislation was passed by Congress over the veto of President Truman. It restricted unions from engaging in certain practices including inducing an employer to discriminate against an employee who had been expelled from a union for any other reason than failing to pay dues; restricting the rights of employees to form and participate in unions; and limiting the right to strike. Furthermore, the Taft-Hartley Act increased the role of the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) in union politics by requiring that all unions register with the federally-regulated NLRB. The Taft-Hartley Act is often referred to in these records in various legal challenges throughout the subsequent decade. The unions and organizations most often referred to in these records include the United Mine Workers (UMW), the United Auto Workers (UAW), the American Federation of Labor (AFL) and the Congress of Industrial Organizations (CIO). The AFL-CIO united in 1955.

The subseries is divided under the following headings: unions, federal government, legislation, state issues, cases, protest, other organizations, and miscellaneous. Union documents include records for any recognized union, its internal democracy, or its charter. Federal government records are composed of documents relating to the labor views and practices of any facet of the United States government. Legislation files include proposed federal legislation governing business and labor practices. State issues files include records relating to state labor bureaus and state and local legislation. The case files contain only legal cases in which the ACLU had minimal or no involvement. These cases served as legal precedents and often evoked much debate within the ACLU in terms of policy concerning certain important issues. Protest files include records pertinent to strikes by labor unions and picketing in general. Files on other organizations include records pertinent to the AFL-CIO.

Right to License, 1954-1972 [bulk 1954-1961] [Boxes 856-857]

This subseries (0.84 l.f.) is a miscellaneous collection of correspondence and briefs relating to questions of legal licensing. It includes documents pertaining to specific court cases and legislation as well as requests for advice from various private sources. The licensing in question ranges from liquor licenses and parade permits to tutoring licenses and admission to the bar.

Loyalty and Security, 1939-1981 [bulk 1947-1968] [Boxes 858-915]

The Loyalty and Security subseries (24.36 l.f.) documents the ACLU's monitoring of and fight against due process abuses that resulted from perceived national security threats during the Cold War. It is arranged chronologically by year and then divided by the headings: miscellaneous, cases, Congressional investigating committees (excluding HUAC), Federal Loyalty Program, Fifth Amendment, House Committee on Un-American Activities (HUAC), legislation, military security, private industry, and sedition and subversion. The files contain correspondence, memoranda, manuscripts, reports, legal documents, and printed materials.

Cases is the largest heading within the subseries and documents individuals' cases in which the ACLU had an interest. The cases are organized by subjects including civilian loyalty, Coast Guard loyalty, Fifth Amendment, government, Gwinn Amendment, general loyalty, contempt, military loyalty, private industry, sedition, Smith Act, and treason.

The Federal Loyalty Program files document President Truman's executive order of March 21, 1947, allowing the government to deny employment to anyone when "reasonable grounds exist for belief that the person involved is disloyal to the government of the United States." These files span the years 1947 through 1962. The Fifth Amendment files document when people refused to testify against themselves or others, and the Gwinn Amendment files cover the issue of required loyalty oaths from individuals residing in public housing.

The HUAC files are extensive and document the activities of the committee in detail and the ACLU's efforts to curb its power. There are several boxes devoted solely to HUAC and one box to "Operation Abolition," a propaganda film made by HUAC. "Operation Abolition" created much controversy due to the blatant distortion of the events surrounding a student protest against HUAC hearings in San Francisco. These files are located at the end of the Loyalty and Security subseries. (Series 6, Audio-visual Materials includes a copy of "Operation Abolition.")

Much of the Legislative heading concerns efforts to prevent the passage of loyalty oaths in various states. The private industry heading primarily deals with questions of loyalty and loyalty oaths for defense industry workers. The sedition and subversion heading is comprised of materials concerning the Communist Party and other political groups or individuals suspected of wanting to overthrow the U.S. government.

Also included are two small groupings of material. The files for 1952 contain research materials collected for the publication of the Judges and the Judged, a detailed report on blacklisting prepared by Merle Miller for the ACLU. In the 1953 run, ten files document the trial of Ethel and Julius Rosenberg for espionage and the ACLU response.

Related records include the Marshall Civil Liberties Trust Fund records, the Elizabeth Gurley Flynn ouster files, and the Mass Communications subject files (for materials on blacklisting) subseries.

Mass Communications, 1945-1988 [bulk 1948-1968] [Boxes 916-956]

The Mass Communications subject files (17.22 l.f.) reflect the ACLU's concern with equality of access to and fairness in use of all forms of mass communications—from newspapers and radio in the 1940s to digital communications in the 1980s. The files consist of correspondence with various ACLU staff members, printed materials, Federal Communications Commission (FCC) documents, background information on mass communications cases of interest to the ACLU, radio and TV scripts, speeches, legislation, ACLU policy statements, newspaper clippings, reports, and memoranda.

The materials have been grouped under the following headings which are used throughout the subseries but are not represented in every year: miscellaneous, blacklisting, FCC, movies, press, and radio/TV. The miscellaneous heading contains information on telecommunications in the 1970s and 1980s primarily. The blacklisting files concentrate on 1950s materials on individuals and the general climate that led to blacklisting. There is a large amount of material under the FCC heading with earlier years concentrating on diversity and access to the radio airwaves, changing to materials almost exclusively concerned with television in the late 1960s through the 1980s. Many cases that the ACLU expressed an interest in or wherein it represented an individual brought before the FCC are documented. Some issues covered are cable TV, the fairness doctrine, and diversity in programming. The radio/TV materials are also extensive and cover many of the same issues as the FCC materials. The movies heading covers films on civil liberties issues, and loyalty oaths in the movie industry during the 1950s. The press materials cover cases of libel and slander, and loyalty oaths.

For additional materials, please refer to the Censorship, Dorothy Dunbar Bromley, and Board Committees subseries.

Military Rights, 1946-1983 [Boxes 957-967]

The Military Rights subseries (4.62 l.f.) is comprised of materials relating to the draft, conscientious objection to war, military service, and the United States's participation in wars. The files relating to the Vietnam War are most extensive for the years 1966 to 1970.

The subseries is arranged chronologically with consistent headings throughout the collection. Headings include miscellaneous, conscientious objection (C.O.), C.O. cases, draft, military service, and the Vietnam War. The draft heading begins in 1965, and military service in 1967. The various forms of materials in the collection include publications, memoranda, ACLU policy statements and press releases, background papers, legislation, newspaper clippings, journal articles, conference reports, and correspondence.

Among the major issues covered in the 1950s are a proposed executive order for parole of conscientious objectors (1951-1953), the FBI's reports on draft registrants (1955), and non-religious conscientious objectors (1959). One of the cases covered in the 1950s is the conscientious objection case, Jost v. United States (1955). The files on military chaplaincy in the armed forces are grouped under the military service heading. In the 1950s and 1960s, the ACLU actively challenged compulsory religious services in the Army, Navy and Air Force, as in the McGuire Air Force Base case (1964).

The 1960s files contain substantive materials on proposed revisions to the Universal Military Training and Service Act of 1948 and numerous files relating to military service in the Vietnam War. One of the major issues covered in the period is General Lewis B. Hershey's directive, released in October 1967, which suggested that the Selective Service System might reclassify draft registrants who had student deferments if they participated in anti-war protests. Other issues covered during the Vietnam War period are: "in-service" conscientious objection cases, and the "alternative service" option, whereby a conscientious objector fulfilled his military duty by working in a civilian public service program. Starting in 1966, there are files for "selective conscientious objection" or "conscientious objection to a particular war." There are also materials for the widely-publicized conscientious objection case of the court martial of Captain Howard B. Levy, M.D. (1967).

In the 1960s and early 1970s, the ACLU worked with numerous organizations campaigning against the war in southeast Asia. Starting in 1965, there is a file on U.S. Senate hearings on "The Anti-Vietnam Agitation and the Teach-In Movement: The Problem of Communist Infiltration and Exploitation."

In the period from 1947 to 1984, the ACLU worked with outside organizations which included the Committee for Amnesty, Metropolitan Board for Conscientious Objectors, Central Committee for Conscientious Objectors (CCCO), National Service Board for Religious Objectors (NSBRO), Fellowship on Reconciliation (FOR), War Resisters League, and the American Friends Service Committee (AFSC). There is substantive correspondence with leaders of these organizations, e.g., Frieda Lazarus (Metropolitan Board for C.O.'s), A.J. Muste (FOR), and George Willoughby and Lyle Tatum (CCCO).

See also the Amnesty Project subseries, Church and State subject files, Dorothy Dunbar Bromley files, Military Justices subject files, and Assembly and Public Protest subject files. Under Board Committees, the Special Committee on the Military and the Bill of Rights (1970), and the Special Committee on the Draft (1966) may also be of interest.

Series 3, Subject Files: Due Process of Law

Miscellaneous, 1955-1972 [Boxes 968-972]

The Due Process Miscellaneous files (2.1 l.f.) include material that documents civil liberties violations relating primarily to fair trial concerns. Materials include correspondence, newspaper clippings, and court documents arranged chronologically by year and alphabetically by subject. Additional subjects include right to counsel, the Fifth Amendment, capital punishment, and the use of illegally seized evidence and illegally obtained confessions by the prosecution. Many of the issues covered in these records overlap considerably with the Police Practices and Prisoners' Rights subseries.

Children's Rights, 1953-1987 [Boxes 973-974]

The Children's Rights subseries (0.84 l.f.) contains correspondence, memoranda, clippings, other organizations' publications, and a small amount of legal and case-related materials that document the ACLU's interest in extending certain civil liberties to children. The subseries documents the organization's interest in cases involving due process, habeas corpus, curfews, double jeopardy, and the equal application of punishment, including capital punishment. The records also chronicle the ACLU's interest in legislative issues such as the National Runaway

Youth Act of 1973 and the Neighborhood Youth Corps.

Court Proceedings, 1949-1976 [bulk 1958-1969] [Boxes 975-994]

The Court Proceedings subseries (8.4 l.f.) consists of newspaper clippings, court documents, correspondence, and testimony regarding legal cases before the courts concerned with the possibility of civil liberties infractions in the case itself, or with infringement by the courts of the due process of law. The cases in this subseries are primarily focused on the machinery of the court system itself and ensuring that any attempt by the court to circumvent the due process of law is contested.

The records are organized chronologically by year, with the cases organized alphabetically within each year. The cases are titled under the particular issues of interest, with the specific case name included in most instances.

Government Due Process, 1947-1973 [bulk 1957-1969] [Boxes 995-1026]

The Government Due Process subseries (13.44 l.f.) documents due process issues in federal and state governments, including the federal court system. The subseries contains correspondence, printed materials, and court papers documenting the actions of government entities in which the ACLU became concerned about breeches of due process. It is organized chronologically by year and alphabetically within each year.

Within the federal government heading, the files are separated by government branch: executive, legislative, and judicial. Within the executive branch the materials are organized alphabetically by department. The Department of Justice (including the Federal Bureau of Investigation), the Department of Defense, and the Civil Service Commission are well represented. Under the President heading are files concerning Watergate and the ACLU impeachment campaign in 1973 and 1974.

The legislative branch files document due process issues before legislative committees and are divided into miscellaneous, House of Representatives, and Senate categories. Also consult the Loyalty and Security subject files for materials on the House Committee on Un-American Activities, and the Senate Internal Security Committee.

Government Legislation, 1938-1964 [Boxes 1027-1054]

This subseries (11.76 l.f.) consists of correspondence, newspaper clippings, and press releases regarding various bills and acts that interested the ACLU. The material is organized chronologically by year, under federal or state legislature headings, and is then arranged alphabetically with folder titles describing the issue or bill in question.

This subseries is primarily concerned with the ACLU's response to various bills and acts arising in federal and state legislatures. This includes correspondence to rank-and-file ACLU members drawing attention to bills and acts that should be supported or opposed, as well as correspondence between the ACLU and various members of legislative bodies in which the ACLU attempted to garner support to pass or defeat motions in which civil liberties questions were at issue. The subseries documents the ACLU's participation in the consideration of legislation, including testimony given by the ACLU and reports produced by ACLU counsel regarding possible ramifications. There is substantial material involving loyalty-security legislation, the collection of government agency information (especially by the FBI), infringement of privacy, and various employment practice issues.

Japanese-American Internment, 1942-1955 [Boxes 1055-1056]

This subseries (0.84 l.f.) documents the ACLU's opposition to the U.S. government relocation of Japanese-Americans living in the western United States to internment camps in the name of national security during World War II. Most Japanese-Americans lost their homes, possessions and in some cases their citizenship. This subseries consists almost entirely of correspondence and court papers documenting individual cases. Issues of concern include citizenship rights, property and land laws, deportations, renunciation cases, education and racism. Please consult the ACLU finding aid, 1917-1950 ("The Roger Baldwin Years") to locate earlier ACLU materials pertaining to the Japanese-American internment.

Mental Health Issues, 1941-1978 [Boxes 1057-1066]

The Mental Health subseries (4.2 l.f.) contains files related to the legal rights of the mentally ill, general mental health issues, and the treatment of patients in mental hospitals. The bulk of the collection is comprised of individual case materials in which patients corresponded with ACLU staff seeking help in obtaining their release from mental hospitals. The ACLU legal staff evaluated cases to determine if any patients suffered civil liberties violations.

This subseries contains correspondence, background papers, draft legislation, newspaper clippings, ACLU policy statements and press releases, conference reports, legal briefs, memoranda and publications. It is arranged chronologically by year with consistent headings throughout the collection including: alcoholism, cases, commitment, insanity and criminal law, legislation, mental due process, mental health (general issues), mental hospitals, mentally ill (legal rights), and mental retardation.

The ACLU collected legislative documents and information from outside organizations dedicated to mental health and mental illness issues, and much of the material in the 1940s covers state mental health laws and articles on legislation pertaining to patients in mental hospitals. The 1945 ACLU-sponsored conference on the rights of the mentally ill and the papers it generated are documented. There is substantive correspondence with Dr. Winfred Overholzer of the American Psychiatric Association, Thomas G. Walsh of the American Bar Association, Ellen C. Philtine of the People's Committee for Mental Hygiene, and Willard Hetzel and Harold Barton both from the National Mental Health Foundation.

Under the mentally ill heading, there are files of the "Model Commitment and Release Law," authored by staff counsel Clifford Forster in 1945. Slightly amended versions of this law and a supporting memorandum were released in 1946, 1949, and 1960. In 1965-1966, the ACLU circulated among members of its Due Process Committee a 50-page memorandum by ACLU volunteer attorney William W. Brackett, and a commentary by Grace Robinson, which reflected the debate among professionals in law, psychology, psychiatry and social work on treatment and civil liberties issues regarding mental patients.

The mental health heading contains files on the ACLU's involvement in legislative action which would affect commitment proceedings in civil and criminal cases. The 1962 files contain statements of the ACLU presented before the Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights of the Committee on the Judiciary. The mental hospitals heading covers files relating to conditions at Matteawan State Hospital (Beacon, NY) and psychiatric hospitals in other states.

Under the cases heading, there is an extensive file covering the legal proceedings following the 1945 commitment of poet Ezra Pound to a federal hospital in Washington, D.C. Pound had been indicted for treason for war-time broadcasts made in Italy. Declared insane and unable to stand trial, he was held under criminal court order in St. Elizabeth's Hospital. The file covers the period 1956 to 1958, when the ACLU publicized the details of Pound's case in an effort to assist his release, which occurred in April 1958.

In the 1970s, the ACLU co-sponsored the Mental Health Law Project. There are publications of this project in the ACLU Printed Materials series, as well as other publications relating to mental health in this series' Printed Materials subject files subseries.

Military Justice, 1947-1973 [bulk 1960-1972] [Boxes 1067-1072]

The Military Justice subseries (2.52 l.f.) contains materials on the rights of servicemen and women in the armed forces. The collection is arranged chronologically with consistent headings. The various forms of materials in this subseries include correspondence, memoranda, legal briefs, press releases, clippings, legislation, and Department of Defense forms. This subseries contains substantial correspondence of the ACLU Washington office director, Lawrence Speiser, with Legal Director Melvin Wulf. Assistant Legal Director Eleanor Holmes Norton also worked extensively on military justice cases.

The types of cases covered include bad conduct discharges, administrative discharges, and draft classifications. Other cases involve loyalty and security issues, such as a person's participation in leftist organizations or activities. Under the miscellaneous heading, there are files which contain research papers on the military justice system. In 1967, the ACLU sponsored a research project conducted by University of Michigan law students. The paper explains the three types of courts-martial (summary, special, and general) and the structure of the Court of Military Appeals. In 1970 and 1971, the ACLU and its affiliates worked closely with the National Council to Repeal the Draft, American Friends Service Committee and other organizations to repeal the draft, and substantial materials on this campaign are to be found.

For the years 1967 to 1972, in particular, this subseries overlaps with the Military Rights and Amnesty Project subseries. The three subseries all contain papers which document the ACLU's involvement in Vietnam War-related issues. The defining characteristics of the three subseries are: Military Justice contains court martial materials; Military Rights covers conscientious objection cases, the draft and miscellaneous issues; and Amnesty Project contains materials on amnesty and clemency for draft resisters and veterans with less-than-honorable discharges.

Police Practices, 1950-1982 [Boxes 1073-1085]

The Police Practices subseries (5.46 l.f.) is primarily concerned with violations of individuals' civil rights by police officers, police departments, and the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Though comprised primarily of correspondence between individuals and the ACLU concerning police misconduct, the subseries also includes court documents, statements, and newspaper clippings. Activities discussed include roadblocks, speed traps, school integration, anti-gay and anti-gypsy activity, lie detectors, and illegal wiretaps.

The subseries is arranged chronologically by year and alphabetically under five headings: miscellaneous, brutality, illegal police practices, police review boards, and search and seizure. This material documents numerous beatings, killings, false arrests, coerced confessions, illegal detentions, illegal searches and seizures, and other abuses of power. The development and installation of civilian police review boards in various cities is also addressed in detail.

For related material the researcher should also consult the Due Process Miscellaneous, Wiretapping and Surveillance, and Prisoners' Rights subseries which also touch on issues of police misconduct.

Prisoners' Rights, 1955-1985 [Boxes 1086-1089]

The Prisoners' Rights subseries (1.68 l.f.) contains materials related to the civil liberties of the imprisoned from 1955 to 1985. Correspondence, internal memoranda, and reports related to civil rights and fair treatment in jail are found. The bulk of the files are from 1960 containing prisoner mail to the ACLU, arranged alphabetically by state of origin. These letters portray prison life and often speak of civil rights violations of the incarcerated.

Right to Privacy, 1939-1988 [Boxes 1090-1094]

The Right to Privacy subseries (2.1 l.f.) contains correspondence, briefs, reports, printed material, and clippings. The headings reflect the issues these documents address: alcohol, data collection, drugs, medical rights, sexual privacy, and smoking. The ACLU fought for the right of doctors to hold a medical license regardless of political views, the relaxation of restrictions on marijuana, against government and private sector invasion of privacy through data collection, and against sanctions on private consensual sexual activity between adults. The miscellaneous heading contains many files on water fluoridation. For materials on reproductive freedom, consult the Women's Rights subseries.

Wiretapping and Surveillance, 1942-1980 [Boxes 1095-1097]

The Wiretapping and Surveillance subseries (1.26 l.f.) contains materials on the use of wiretapping and surveillance techniques on individuals by the police, government agencies, and private employers. The files contain correspondence, printed materials, court documents, legislation, and memoranda. Consult the Police Practices subseries under the Due Process heading for collateral information.

Series 3, Subject Files: Equality Before the Law

Miscellaneous, 1956-1975 [Box 1098]

This subseries (0.21 l.f.) contains materials from 1956, 1972, 1973, and 1975. The subjects covered include discrimination against non-citizens, private organization discrimination, and disability law.

Civil Rights, 1943-1979 [bulk 1958-1970] [Boxes 1099-1126]

The Civil Rights subseries (11.76 l.f.) contains legal, administrative, and correspondence files relating to the ACLU's involvement in the protection of individual liberties. The subseries is organized chronologically with various headings for each year (though not all headings appear in every year) and contains newspaper clippings, correspondence, memoranda, and background papers. While the bulk of materials deals with the rights of African Americans, several files contain material related to the liberties of Jews, Mexican Americans, aliens, and the disabled.

The modern civil rights movement began with the 1954 Supreme Court decision to desegregate public schools, Brown v. Board of Education. As with many other important cases of the time, the ACLU filed an amicus curiae brief in the Brown case (see Series 4, Legal Case Files). The Brown decision triggered a maelstrom of opposition from conservative white politicians, particularly in the South. Hence, many of the files from the 1950s and even the 1960s are related to the unwillingness of various school districts to grant African American students the rights which were guaranteed by the Brown decision. In addition to public schools, university and parochial school issues are also documented.

The ACLU took an extremely active role in the civil rights movement of the 1960s. Its direct involvement in sit-ins and other protests harkened back to the organization's intense activity in defense of workers' rights during the 1920s and 1930s. As the protest movement grew increasingly more radical—from the Freedom Riders early in the decade to the Black Panther Movement of the late 1960s—the ACLU's support for the doctrine of equal protection under the law did not wane, nor did the Union restrict its support to any one area of the far-flung civil rights quest. This subseries documents the ACLU's fight to gain equal access for all citizens in employment in both the public and private sector (and details the internal debate concerning affirmative action and quota-based hiring), housing, public accommodations (including restaurants, businesses, community swimming pools, and local parks), transportation, and at the polls (including fair representation in Congressional re-districting).

Documents under the housing heading detail discriminatory practices by neighborhoods and builders attempting to keep African Americans out of their communities through restrictive covenants, or mortgage or insurance restrictions. The interracial issues heading contains background information and correspondence related to local and state miscegenation ordinances. This subseries also documents changes in federal and state legislation concerning civil rights; most notable are folders related to the Civil Rights Acts of 1964 and the Voting Rights Act of 1965. The private organizations heading includes background documents and correspondence concerning discriminatory practices, as well as many documents from private organizations that supported the ACLU's fight for the protection of civil liberties, including the American Jewish Congress, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP), and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC).

The peaceful and violent protests that marked the civil rights movement are documented as well in this subseries under the protest movements heading, which contains notable papers and records of Martin Luther King, Jr., Rosa Parks, the Alabama bus boycott, the sit-in movement, the Freedom Riders, and the Black Panther organization.

Lesbian and Gay Rights, 1953-1987 [Box 1127]

This subseries (0.42 l.f.) contains ACLU policy statements and correspondence, including some requests for assistance. The dismissal of 15 instructors and staff members from the University of Florida in 1959 is covered in detail. This subseries is small due to the relatively minor status lesbian and gay rights were given by the ACLU until the formation of the Sexual Privacy Project in 1973. The researcher may also want to consult the Military Justice, Government, and Censorship subseries, and Series 5, Printed Materials for additional materials related to issues concerning lesbians and gays.

Native Americans, 1947-1977 [Boxes 1128-1133]

This subseries (2.52 l.f.) is comprised of correspondence, legislation, newspaper clippings, and reports documenting Native Americans' need for education, food, land, legal equality, legal representation and the right to vote. Alaskan, Arizonan, Bosone, Navajo, and Pyramid Lake tribes are well-represented in the earlier years of this subseries.

The subseries includes materials from many organizations that focus specifically on Native American issues such as the Association on American Indian Affairs, Bureau of Indian Affairs, and the National Congress of American Indians. These files contain examples of the efforts made by these organizations in conjunction with the ACLU to stabilize and improve the quality of Native American lives. The legal struggle to ensure that the government fulfills its moral and legal obligation to Native Americans can also be found in non-organizational files. For instance, the file on the 1952 law and order bill discusses “authorizing the Indian Bureau to seize, search, arrest and shoot Indians” who were charged with a law violation.

Many general folders toward the end of this subseries dating from the late 1960s and 1970s focus on individual incidents and events, at the expense of in-depth coverage of the broader topics documented earlier, suggesting declining ACLU interest in this area, especially after the establishment of the ACLU Mountain States Regional Office in the late 1960s which specialized in Native American issues.

Poverty and Civil Liberties, 1960-1979 [Boxes 1134-1136]

This subseries (1.26 l.f.) contains documents relating to the legal and economic rights of the poor. The majority of material covers the late 1960s, a time of sweeping civil rights and welfare legislation affecting the rights of the poor. These records also document internal ACLU discussions over whether poverty constituted a proper area of action for the ACLU.

The files are arranged chronologically, with consistent headings throughout the collection, including children, civil rights, labor, poverty, and welfare. Materials are primarily composed of memoranda concerning poverty- and welfare-related ACLU activities, internal reports, newspaper clippings, and printed matter.

The files document the dedication of the ACLU to protecting the rights of those lacking the resources to acquire proper legal assistance in the face of governmental refusal to grant assistance. The breaches of civil liberties often affected groups such as migrant farm workers and welfare-dependent single mothers.

Voting Rights, 1941-1975 [Boxes 1137-1141]

Correspondence, court documents, newspaper clippings, and reports related to elections and voting rights comprise the materials in this subseries (2.1 l.f.). Such issues as the required number of signatures for a new party to be recognized; the rights of minority parties (such as the Progressive Party, Socialist Party or Christian Nationalist Party) to partake in the election process; discussions of the laws concerning United States citizens and foreign elections; and election laws in general are detailed. One topic covered in great detail is reapportionment: there are many discussions of legislation related to the Supreme Court’s ruling (Baker v. Carr) requiring state legislatures to apportion their representation on the basis of population .

Women’s Rights, 1953-1984 [Boxes 1142-1147]

The women’s rights subseries (2.52 l.f.) documents the ACLU’s involvement with issues such as education, employment, equal rights, jury duty and reproductive freedom. Generally, these materials and correspondence do not provide extensive documentation of particular issues. The bulk of the material is general correspondence of Alan Reitman (Associate Director) and Melvin L. Wulf (Legal Director) with individuals and lawyers. Additionally, there are legal records, memoranda, testimonies and reports.

A topic covered in detail is employment, with discussions of issues such as the equal pay act and specific incidents such as job discrimination in the Southern Pacific Railroad Company as but two examples. Another well-documented topic is the issue of women jurors.

The reproductive freedom files contain materials on abortion, birth control, and sterilization. The ACLU was particularly active in the struggle during the 1950s and 1960s to make the distribution of birth control devices legal. Finally, the topic of abortion is examined from the popular angle (exploring how abortion is viewed by the citizens), and the legal angle (debating the ambiguous role of the courts in abortion issues).

Series 3, Subject Files: International Civil Liberties, 1942-1982 [Boxes 1148-1187]

The International Civil Liberties subseries (19 l.f.) contains press releases, correspondence with officials like General Douglas MacArthur, and reports on censorship, labor laws and U.S. policy. Much of this material attests to Roger Baldwin's personal interest in international civil liberties during this period.

The subseries is divided into three parts. The first, Subject Files (1942-1982), comprising reports, memoranda, publications, news clippings and other miscellany, documents U.S. policy and civil liberties cases in foreign countries (especially England, Canada, and Germany). Literature from foreign rights organizations like the Japanese and German Civil Liberties Unions, are also preserved here, as is the United Nations, its cases and off-shoot organizations. Though the collection runs from 1942 through 1982, the later years tend to be thinner, containing mostly published literature.

The second part, U.S. Occupied Areas (1946-1973), initially focuses on Germany, Korea and Japan, the rights of Americans in these areas and the imposition of American-influenced constitutions. By the 1950s, America had pulled out of most territories and the collection is dominated by material on Japan, particularly press releases and Baldwin's memoranda on Okinawa, a Ryukyu island south of Japan where the U.S. established a strategic base after World War II and which remained America's sole occupied territory through the early 1970s.

The third part, U.S. Possessions (1946-1979), documents United States involvement in the Virgin Islands, Puerto Rico, Samoa and Guam, and to a lesser extent Micronesia and the Panama Canal area. As with the occupied territories, Baldwin's concern was with constitutional development, legislation and elections. Congressional hearings and legislation such as the Virgin Islands' Organic Act are well documented. Correspondence between Baldwin and ACLU representatives in these territories becomes sparser by the 1970s, and pertains mostly to Puerto Rico.

The board of directors at the ACLU did not share Baldwin's passion for international civil liberties issues. By the 1970s, after constitutions were established in America's occupied and acquired territories, and once the United Nations was firmly established, Baldwin's expertise became somewhat superfluous and the ACLU retreated from international concerns.

Series 3, Subject Files: Miscellaneous, 1921-1980 [Boxes 1188-1192]

This subseries consists of a variety of material gathered together by the ACLU as "miscellaneous," as well as material placed under that heading by the processors of this project. It includes correspondence, memoranda, manuscripts, press releases, clippings, articles, legal documents, and bail bonds and is arranged chronologically. It contains materials on presidential elections from 1948 to 1964 and on election and campaign reform including statements and testimony by members of the ACLU and also questionnaires of candidate's views on civil liberties issues. Also to be found is information on municipal and state ordinances, as well as a book of cancelled bail bonds from 1927-1931, showing the grassroots legal efforts of the ACLU to defend the rights of those associated with unpopular organizations. There are yearly compilations of "Descriptive Summaries of ACLU Case Actions Taken in Defense of Civil Liberties" (1946-1953); "Reference Books" compiled by the staff of the ACLU (1921-1946) containing memoranda of law and summary reports related to various civil liberties issues; information on films and television programs about civil liberties, such as "Inherit the Wind" and a television program on Sacco and Vanzetti; and manuscripts relating to civil liberties topics written by staffers of the ACLU and persons outside the organization and submitted to the ACLU for approval or editorial comment.

There are also a few files containing correspondence from the 1940s and 1950s which was at that time considered "confidential" and a "Survey of Communist-Oriented Organizations and Publications" compiled at the request of Roger Baldwin in 1946.
