Introduction

Othniel Charles Marsh (1831-1899) was the son of Caleb and Mary Peabody Marsh. When Othniel was three years old his mother died of cholera and thereafter her bachelor brother, George Peabody, assumed full financial responsibility for Othniel's education at Andover, Yale, and in Germany. When he returned to Yale in 1865, Marsh was appointed the first professor of paleontology in the western hemisphere and influenced his uncle, George Peabody, to provide funds for the construction of a natural history museum at Yale. While searching for fossils in the western states, Marsh's discoveries included an extinct bird with teeth and eighty new forms of dinosaurs. These won him acclaim at home and in Europe. Owing to the death at mid-term of the president of the National Academy of Science, Marsh became acting president from 1880 to 1883. Then he was elected president for two successive six-year terms, filling that office for a longer span than any previous or subsequent incumbent.

From 1940 to 1970, the Marsh papers were divided between the Peabody Museum at Yale and the Yale University Library. They are now reunited in the Library. In spite of Marsh's importance, no full-length biography of him was published until forty years after his death.* Two earlier attempts at biographies by Ernest Howe and George Bird Grinnell were not completed due to their own deaths.

The general correspondence, hitherto housed at the Peabody Museum, is predominantly scientific in nature, and fills the first thirty-six out of a total of fifty-six boxes of material. This series, consisting of more than twelve thousand items, begins with letters to and from Marsh, written after his return from Germany in 1865, and continues until his death in 1899. The letters are arranged alphabetically by the last name of the writer. Among those prominent in public life or in science represented in this series are the following: Cleveland Abbe; Alexander and Louis Agassiz; Spencer Baird; Phineas Barnum; Albert Bierstadt; George Jarvis Brush; William Frederick Cody; James Dwight Dana; Charles Darwin; Ulysses S. Grant; Asa Gray; Joseph Henry; Ferdinand Hayden; Leonard and Thomas Huxley; Simon Newcomb; Benjamin Silliman, Sr. and Jr.; Herbert Spencer; and Eli Whitney. Relatively few of Marsh's own letters have survived, except for occasional rough drafts which he retained. After the advent of the typewriter, however, his side of the correspondence is represented more frequently.

The most bulky files were contributed by his co-workers and "bonediggers" such as C. E. and M. P. Felch; George Bird Grinnell; John B. Hatcher; Arthur Lakes; Benjamin F. Mudge; Samuel W. Williston; and W. H. Reed. When each specimen was received in New Haven, it was assigned an identifying number, which was also inscribed within a parallelogram on the accompanying letter or letters.

Marsh's fossil collecting reached its peak in the 1870s and 1880s. His autocratic disposition led to difficulties with some of his colleagues. His life-long rivalry with Edward C. Cope, who was his junior by nine years and who also aspired to the presidency of the National Academy of Science but was never elected, was a discredit to both men. Their quarrel is sparsely documented in the correspondence, except for an exchange of letters in 1873. There is also an excerpt from a letter written in December of the same year by one of Marsh's loyal diggers, announcing that Cope had inspected Marsh territory and that Davendorf "...discovered marks distinctly made, I presume by Cope, so I judged he could strike certain places next spring. These marks are now defaced by the sole of my boot, but I know where they are."

*O. C. Marsh, Pioneer in Paleontology, by Charles Schuchert and Clara Mae Le Vene, Yale University Press, 1940

The nine boxes of family materials are divided into two sections: "Family Correspondence" and "Special Files." Letters in the six boxes of family correspondence are arranged alphabetically by the last name of the writer, but are divided into eleven subsections, each devoted to a specific member of the family, namely; O. C. Marsh, his grandfather, father, mother, stepmother, aunts, uncles, and sisters. The "Special Files" contain two and one-half boxes of family material other than correspondence and are divided into seven subsections, six of which are devoted to specific members of the family, and a last subsection which consists of miscellaneous family material. The earliest family letter is dated fourteen years before Othniel's birth, and his mother's special file contains some memorabilia from her own childhood. Included in this series are letters from Marsh to his uncle, George Peabody, and others, with reference to the projected Peabody Museum, and memorabilia of Marsh's German sojourn. From the date of his appointment to the chair of paleontology at Yale in 1865 until his death, Marsh received no salary, presumably because it was expected that he would be one of George Peabody's chief heirs.

Four boxes are devoted to Marsh's education, including early catalogues, receipts, autographs, and his Yale notebooks on chemistry, geology, and meteorology, together with his Berlin notes on zoology and paleontology and his Breslau notes on echinoderms and geognosie, and his passport, letter of credit, and German diplomas.

Unpublished writings, such as diaries, notebooks, and compositions written at Andover and at Yale fill one box. Another contains biographical material, notably five chapters of his own projected autobiography begun a year before his death and known as his "Narrative Volume." One chapter of this unfinished work, condensed in the Schuchert-Le Vene biography, provides a vivid account of a buffalo hunt when Marsh was caught on muleback in a stampeding herd. This series also includes letters between Howe and Grinnell and between Howe and Schuchert, and a 1940 exchange between George F. Eaton and J. Donald Adams of the New York Times.

One half-sized box is devoted to the Cardiff Giant Hoax of 1869, which kept recurring in the news until 1918. Marsh was always skeptical and concluded that the alleged giant was no fossil but a hand-carved sculpture,, which had been buried in Onondaga County, New York, so that it might be exhumed in an attempt to deceive the public.

The final four boxes are devoted to the Red Cloud Agency controversy, precipitated by Marsh after he had personally observed how the local agents of the Bureau of Indian Affairs issued short and shoddy ratings to their charges. By calling attention to these corrupt practices, Marsh won the enmity of certain Washington bureaucrats and politicians. After reforms were effected, Red Cloud visited New Haven to thank Marsh in person. Included in this series are the essential government publications pertaining to the controversy, as well as correspondence (arranged chronologically) for the period from 1873 to 1876, plus a few more items dated 1883 and 1891.

Among the many letters congratulating Marsh on his exposure of these scandals, Thaddeus H. Stevens wrote succinctly on June 19, 1875; "Go after the thieves, old boy, and make it hot for 'em."

Marsh devoted so much of his inherited fortune to the collecting of specimens for Yale that at the end of his life he found himself forced to mortgage his Prospect Street home. Never having married, he named Yale his sole beneficiary, but his estate amounted to very little, except for the $18,694 realized when the contents of his home were auctioned in New York.
